ROSENWALD BALKS NEW PLOT

Today

Trying to Be Atheistic.
Here Comes Silver.
Puzzle for Gabriel.
A Wonder Now. Relic Later.

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

AUTHORITY in Russia, trying vainly to believe that God doesn't exist, dislikes the "Christmas spirit" and orders "100 per cent attendance of workers at their jobs Christmas Day."

Even at their jobs, they can see the sky, and at night, when they go home, they will see the stars, and still ask, as Napoleon did on the ship bound for St. Helena:

"Who made all that?"

Russia is told that the Christian religion is "counter-revolutionary, used by capitalist, Fascists and clergy to conceal war preparations, to resist the revolutionary movement, and to justify starvation, poverty and unemployment."

The would-be atheists of Russia must have read the Bible carelessly, for in the New Testament is the first revolutionary movement.

"Take all that thou hast and give to the poor."

"It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God."

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you.

"Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten.

"Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rest of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days."

Those four verses by James, one of the Apostles, said to be of the family of Christ, and put to death according to Josephus by the high priest Ananias, are not exactly what you might call "counter-revolutionary." They make Karl Marx and Lenin sound like members of the Union League Club.

TO MILLIONS in America this Christmas means three holidays in succession, Saturday, Sunday, Monday, time enough for a real holiday, and to contemplate the world at leisure.

The "Saturday off," that depression has forced in many industries, may become a permanent institution after full prosperity returns, and again the old saying, "There is some good in all evil," will be justified.

THE PRESIDENT wisely decided to make good, shiny, genuine heavy silver part of our money system and for a start will buy 24 million ounces per year.

Silver goes up, stocks go up, everybody seems happy, except the incurable gold bug. You cannot make him happy, anyhow.

SILVER, FOR thousands of years practically the only money used in the world, is as good, in proportion to its rarity, as gold, certainly a great deal better than paper, and should be coined as freely as gold was ever coined.

And this, remember, is the silver-producing nation. Gold is a British specialty.

AS ONE reader points out, silver money would discourage bank robbers, for they couldn't carry enough to be worth the risk. Fifty thousands dollars in silver would weigh more than a ton and a half. The strongest bank robber could not carry more than two hundred pounds.

And silver seems like real money.

Asiatic workers, when they get gold coin or banknotes, run to change it into silver, rupees in India, taels in China, and then feel that they have real money.

C. J. ISRAEL, 88-year-old Civil War veteran, decided that he had lived long enough and would look for a better place. He was not poor, simply disappointed in life.

Before shooting himself, the old man gave a Christmas dinner to more than one hundred children in Maxwell, Neb., and sent a box of candy to every child in the village.

Suicide is a very serious sin, but the Angel Gabriel, after he had written down "dinners for hundred children, candy for all children," must have hesitated to write "suicide."

Perhaps both items were scratched off and the life-weary old man will find a new, happy beginning in the life that lasts forever.

THE AIRPLANE in which Col. Lindbergh has traveled with his wife 30,000 miles, touching three continents, goes to New York's Museum of Natural History.

Crowds of 1934 will look at it in awe, as a marvelous proof of progress.

Crowds of 2034 will look at it as today's crowds look at the first locomotive and wonder "how anybody dared to fly in such a thing."

However, not time or mechanical improvements will do away with the fact that Lindbergh made the first non-stop flight between New York and Paris.

YOUNG LADIES were arrested in New Orleans for "fan dancing" and what the police call "indecency." Thirty-seven men looking on were charged with "loitering." Why the more polite charge?

The so-called "fan dance" disgraces the dancer, the spectators and the promoters, but it proves the importance of clothing.

Without any fans the women would have been quite uninteresting, even to the 37 "loiterers."

EXTORTION SUSPECT SEIZED

Sears, Roebuck Head Threatened Second Time in Months

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 23.—(AP.)—Lessing J. Rosenwald, millionaire chairman of the board of Sears, Roebuck and Company, said today he had been threatened by a man who demanded $30,000. It was the second extortion plot against the wealthy philanthropist in recent months.

Police detained a man for questioning in the case but declined to give any details.

At his home after a conference at City Hall with detectives, Rosenwald said today he received a letter demanding the money about 10 days ago. He added:

"It demanded money and threatened me if I refused to deliver it.

"He (the writer) told me to leave it at Olney avenue and American street where this fellow was arrested."

Stating several other letters were received with instructions as to where the money should be placed and the denominations desired, Rosenwald said:

"However, they were very vague as to the type of injury which would be inflicted if I failed to pay.

"The letters were so apparently the work of an amateur that I can't say I worried a great deal about them. They had all the ear-marks of a brainstorm."

Last April, Rosenwald received similar letters and his co-operation with police in the case resulted in the arrest of Charles Weil, 28-year-old bookkeeper, who had demanded $100,000.

Weil was captured in a cigar store telephone booth while talking to Rosenwald. He pleaded guilty and was sentenced to seven and a half years in the penitentiary.

Police said the man under arrest is William Schultze, 34, of this city. They said he is charged with threats to do bodily harm and extortion.

POPE URGES WORLD TO PRAY

Scores Germany Over Sterilization Program

VATICAN CITY, Dec. 23.—(AP.)—"Prayers, prayers, prayers" are necessary in the present international situation, Pope Pius told the College of Cardinals and Roman prelates in his annual Christmas address today.

He said:

"Money, money, money is needed to wage war."

CRITICIZES GERMANY

Severely criticizing the sterilization program of Germany, the Pope said the inconsistency of such practices in the light of religious teachings was clearly set forth in a papal decree of 1931 and in the encyclical, "Castii Connubii."

Declaring that the international situation is bound up "with uncertainties and distrust by the clashing interests of fruitless negotiations," the Pope said the best comment he could offer is, "nobody knows" what the outcome will be.

Those who had been expecting a long, analytical pontifical address on this occasion were to be disappointed, he added, saying that the situation did not warrant a more than an intimate talk with the churchmen.

RELIGIOUS REDEMPTION

This year, from a religious viewpoint, has been one of religious redemption with "work in many souls and over a vast scale."

There are many other things "that we feel in our heart, but cannot say," he declared.

He continued:

"All those who wish for the welfare, peace, and concord of the world and the general good of the whole Christian family, but who are in the same situation as are we, namely, obliged to judge events by that which is done, or better said, that

RUM STORE SITE NEAR CHURCH

Location Near Mellon Gift Building May Be Opposed

One of the state's new liquor stores is slated for a most imposing neighborhood—in the shadow of the Mellon family's East Liberty Presbyterian Church.

It is going to be about 125 yards from the church, unless there are objections.

And the site chosen is Mellon property, within full view of the Baum boulevard-Whitfield street side of the new church.

UP TO TAXPAYERS

Quarters close to the Mellon family said there probably will be no objection to having the liquor dispensary in proximity to the costly edifice, being erected as a gift of the late R. B. Mellon and his wife, and A. W. Mellon, to the congregation.

It was learned elsewhere, however, that the site may be objectionable to members of the congregation including some of the Mellon family.

The option was taken on a four-story brick building at 5934 Baum boulevard which will be fitted out to dispense liquor unless 15 or more taxpayers residing within a quarter of a mile of the location

BROTHERS DROWN IN M'KEES ROCKS

Tragedy Ends Holiday Joy for Baby, Wife Of One Victim

A moment after exchanging Christmas wishes with fellow workers, two brothers plunged to death when their small coupe careened through the fog into Chartiers Creek before daylight this morning.

The bodies of Reginald Barton, 28, and his brother, Charles, 30, of Moon Run, were dragged from the creek nearly three hours after the car left the unprotected cinder road that leads from the Federal Enameling and Stamping Company, Thompson avenue, McKees Rocks, where they were both employed.

Charles was hurrying home to trim the Christmas tree for his daughter. Only last night he had built a foundation for the tree.

McKees Rocks firemen pulled the car from the creek, where it was completely submerged. Both doors were open and the brothers were at first believed to have saved themselves. But their bodies were later recovered about 10 feet from where the car left the 12-foot embankment.

Neither of the men could swim,

SPY SUSPECT COLLAPSES

By WILLIAM PARKER

International News Service.

PARIS, Dec. 23.—His eyes bloodshot and his clothing dirty and disheveled, Robert Gordon Switz, East Orange, N. J., aviator, collapsed today on his arraignment before an examining magistrate on charges of participation in an international spy ring.

The youthful American fainted and slumped on the floor of the anteroom leading to the offices of Magistrate Benon in the Palais de Justice.

Revived, he was half carried before the bar of justice to face accusations that he and his wife, a Vassar graduate, had sold French military secrets to an unnamed foreign power.

Switz and his wife were examined separately and then confronted one another in their first meeting since their arrest. The documents seized in raids upon their apartment, which form the basis of the charges, were not opened. They were sealed by police agents immediately after the raids.

ANN AND HARRY HOLD REUNION

International News Service.

HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 23.—The hilltop home of Ann Harding, film star, today was the scene of a happy Christmas reunion between Miss Harding and Harry Bannister, her former husband.

Hollywood hoped for a reconciliation between the pair, divorced at Reno in May, 1932.

Bannister arrived by airplane to visit his former wife and their 5-year-old daughter, Jane.

Miss Harding and Bannister, after they had greeted one another—with a handshake—at the Grand Central air terminal, declared:

"Absolutely no reconciliation."

Miss Harding added:

"When we separated and divorced, we parted the best of friends. Nothing can interfere with that friendship now. I don't think there is anything unusual about my being at the airport to greet him."

From the airport the couple drove in Miss Harding's automobile to her mansion in the hills above Hollywood.

SNOW FOR KRIS UNLIKELY HERE

Santa Claus and his reindeer will have to whisk along without snow this year in making their annual rounds.

A green Christmas was forecast today by Observer W. S. Brotzman, with a probability of rain early in the day. A possibility of snow flurries toward close was foreseen.

Today's sunshine and mild temperatures will give way to rain tomorrow, Brotzman predicted. It likely will not arrive, however, before noon, thus favoring the throngs who will flock to churches for Christmas services.

A rainstorm of vast extent is moving slowly eastward from the northwest, followed by colder weather.

The record warmth of 61 for December 23 in 1900 will be neared today but probably not equalled, Brotzman stated.

Unclaimed Deposits Sought for State

Special Deputy Attorney General John D. Meyer has petitioned Common Pleas Court for an order directing the Union Savings Bank to turn over to the State Treasurer approximately $1,300 belonging to more than 40 depositors who have not claimed the money.

He said the accounts, ranging from $9.17 to $259, have not been increased or diminished in 14 years. Under the law the money reverts to the state.

Avalanche of Snow Buries Dwellings

SANTANDER, Spain, Dec. 23.—(AP.)—An avalanche of snow rolled down from the mountains today and buried cattle and several houses near the town of Aniezo.

The avalanche halted on the outskirts of the village, but the terrific thunder accompanying it alarmed the townsfolk.

Crack Train in West Marooned by Storm

MISSOULA, Mont., Dec. 23.—(INS.)—The Olympian, crack Milwaukee road passenger train, was marooned by washouts today at Drexel, Mont., 80 miles west of here, with indications that it would not be able to move for four or five days.

Tracks were covered with mud and rocks, and several bridges were out following the worst storms in this region since 1908. About 12 miles of the Northern Pacific Low Line track between Missoula and Wallace, Ida., also was out.

Insull Appeals Ouster to Council

ATHENS, Dec. 23.—(INS.)—Samuel Insull, indicted former Chicago utilities magnate, appealed to the Supreme State Council today against the Greek government's refusal to extend his residence permit beyond January 31.

GIN VAT BLAST INJURES 3

An explosion in an 800-gallon gin vat at the plant of Joseph S. Finch Company, distillers, at Schenley, Pa., sent three men to the hospital last night and imperiled nearly 200 girls at work in the plant.

One of the injured men was Thomas Bray, 36, of the Schenley Club, in Schenley, brought here from England two months ago as a gin expert.

Bray, thrown from the building, was found six feet from the demolished wall, his clothing burned from his body. He was taken to Citizens' General Hospital at New Kensington, in a serious condition.

The others injured were Frank Ravenda, 38, of 216 Market street, Freeport, and Steve Nicholas, 24, of 1104 Fairmont avenue, Natrona. Both were severely burned.

No reason for the blast could be advanced by Morris Weiner, plant superintendent, who estimated the damage at $200.

Doom Youth For Fire in Reichstag

International News Service.

LEIPZIG, Germany, Dec. 23.—Marinus Van Der Lubbe, young Dutch brickmason, was sentenced to death and Dr. Ernst Torgler, Communist leader, was acquitted today as the famous Reichstag fire trial ended.

Under the terms of an emergency law passed after the Reichstag fire, Van Der Lubbe faces death by hanging, but there are strong indications the sentence may be commuted to life imprisonment.

The three other defendants, George Dimitroff, Blagor Popoff and Wassel Taneff, Bulgarian Communists, also were acquitted.

The prosecution had asked death for Van Der Lubbe and acquittal for the three Bulgarians, just as the five Supreme Court judges ruled. He had asked death for Torgler as well as the young Dutchman, however, and the Communist leader's acquittal provided the sensation of the verdict.

Torgler's acquittal gave rise to immediate speculation he might be tried again, next time on a charge of high treason.

Her clothing was torn, but she was uninjured.

Ark Floats, 'Noah' Sees World Flood by 1937

SEATTLE, Wash., Dec. 23.—(AP.)—Pacific Northwest residents looked askance today at the prophecy of William Greenwood, a famous "Noah" of the region, that the present floods were only a warning of the one that would engulf the earth four years hence.

In nearly every section they saw unprecedented high waters, with the week's known storm toll at 12 lives, and with the losses in the hundreds of thousands of dollars. More than 5,000 persons were homeless.

Unprecedented rains, cloudbursts, high tides and floods wet the streets of scores of cities and towns over Northern Idaho, all over Washington and Western Oregon.

Greenwood, builder and lone occupant of an ark at Olympia, Wash., whose strange craft was floated for the first time by tides yesterday, said:

"The people need not be afraid of this flood. This is only a warning."

Father Shot by Girl Asks Revenge

Parent Bitter Over Wound Decreed By 'Ouija'

ST. JOHNS, Ariz., Dec. 23.—(AP.)—Ernest J. Turley today expressed a desire to see his 15-year-old daughter punished for shooting him at the "command" of a ouija board which once led him on an empty search for treasure.

Turley, wounded in the back and hip, said:

"She is very much broken up over the whole affair, but the time has passed for juvenile crime to be countenanced in this country."

The girl, Mattie Turley, pleaded guilty in Justice Court to a charge of attempted murder for the shooting, which she said resulted from a seance with her mother, Dorothea Irene Turley, and the board's "command" that she slay her father so her mother "could marry a young cowboy."

Turley, Naval Reserve gunner's mate, was taken by plane to the San Diego (Cal.) naval base hospital, where physicians reported he was "doing well."

The daughter was in the custody of friends awaiting sentence to a school for girls. The County Attorney recommended a six-year sentence.

The mother, who laid claim to the title of "Venus of America," which she said she won in a newspaper contest 15 years ago, was held as an accessory, hoping to gain her freedom next Tuesday on a writ of habeas corpus.

All the troubles of the trio were brought about, so the daughter told Justice Frank Whiting, by the ouija board, which she said was owned by her mother.

First ouija hinted a story of "fabulous wealth" buried near here. On the advice of his wife Turley went in search of it, the girl related. He did not find it.

Last week, the board ordered the death of the father, the girl said. She obtained a shotgun and, when her father was in the corral of a ranch where they lived, 35 miles from here, she took aim between his shoulder blades, but she lost her nerve. She said:

"Then I thought of mother and of how much it would mean to her and, without taking careful aim, I again raised the gun and fired."

The mother denied her daughter's story of seances.

ROOSEVELT ORDERS FULL SPEED ON SILVER PROGRAM

U. S. FOR WORLD AGREEMENT ON GOLD

Roosevelt Discloses Hope for Eventual Compact

International News Service.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—President Roosevelt ordered full speed ahead today in putting his silver program into physical operation, after revealing he hoped some day for an international agreement on gold.

Mr. Roosevelt was careful to make plain at his semi-weekly press conference that, in expressing this hope, he had no thought of any gold pacts being imminent. The thought was simply expressed generally, and long ago the executive let it be known he felt stabilization should come in the future.

MOVE SIGNIFICANT

Nevertheless, the very mention of such a hope was regarded here as significant. The President has been asked by Senator Thomas (Dem.), of Oklahoma, to study a proposal for nationalizing the yellow metal, and has sent the proposed bill to Attorney General Cummings for an opinion. No hint of a White House attitude one way or the other has been given.

In connection with both the silver program and the President's remark about gold, an eight-hour closed conference between the Federal Reserve Board and eastern Federal Reserve governors here brought excited discussion, but yielded little hint of what it was all about.

Some of the bankers, emerging, said they talked about "everything." Most of them flatly refused to be drawn into even a general conversation regarding their meeting.

However, new monetary moves were believed impending as a result of the conference.

"50-CENT" DOLLAR

Among the subjects reportedly discussed was a "50-cent" dollar along with Thomas' plan for nationalization of gold.

Under Thomas' plan the government rather than the Federal Reserve banks would obtain the profit from any revaluation of gold at a lower rate.

If the gold were called into the Treasury and the dollar then stabilized around 50 cents, it would be able to almost double the currency based on the gold and thus make a profit estimated at around four billion dollars.

The silver program, under which the Treasury will, in effect, pay 64.5 cents an ounce for newly mined, domestic silver, will swing into actual operation by Tuesday, under the speed orders of Mr. Roosevelt. Treasury experts worked furiously today, drafting the necessary regulations to put the plan into action.

U. S. Links Debt Payments And Gold Stabilization

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—(Universal.)—In response to informal feelers from abroad, the United States has laid down two conditions that must precede international gold stabilization, Universal Service learns. They are:

1—The principal European nations, and particularly France and Great Britain, must make a substantial and satisfactory agreement on war debts.

2—Europe must come to Washington with definite proposals for stabilization. The United States will not take the initiative.

The revelation that America intends to use the war debts in bargaining on currency stabilization indicates the administration's displeasure over the wholesale European debt defaults. It will be a powerful weapon to bring Europe to terms.

Sharon Wins Fight Against Rum Store

SHARON, Pa., Dec. 23.—(INS.)—Designated as one of the cities for a state liquor store, Sharon today had been taken off the list, it was revealed by the State Liquor Control Board.

Failure to agree on a site and threats by local factions to halt establishment of the store after an option on a site finally was taken, were responsible for the decision, according to Judge Robert Gawthrop, chairman of the Board.

GARBAGE AWARD AWAITS FORMS

Pending the printing of license forms, letting of garbage contracts throughout the county has been held up—at least until next week.

The County Commissioners, who by a state law of this year must license firms entering into garbage contracts, yesterday received license applications from three companies.

Still resentful of the law, which puts them in the "garbage business," the Commissioners said they were too busy with the budget to consider the applications and forms weren't off the presses anyway.

Firms asking for licenses were Spiniello Construction Company, proposing garbage disposal plants in Collier and Penn townships; Joseph Liberto and Sons, proposing a plant in Penn Township and asking a garbage transportation permit, and the Carnegie Reduction Company, proposing a plant in Collier township and transportation permit.

Township Commissioners of Collier Township presented to the City Health Director a formal petition protesting the letting of garbage contracts to contractors who proposed to haul and dispose of garbage at the Carnegie plant located in the township.

Band of Dogs Raid Chicken Run, Kill 25

FALMOUTH, Mass.—Selectman Frederick T. Lawrence, of Falmouth, had a flock of 30 Rhode Island Red chickens, and when he found the bodies of 25 of them strewn about the chicken yard, he notified police.

A gang of four dogs was claimed to be the culprits, and the big police dog owned by the Rev. E. Dent Lackey, clinched his guilt as the "ringleader" by stalking home with one of the chickens.

GERMAN CHURCH CRISIS GROWS

BERLIN, Dec. 23.—(AP.)—A climax was believed to have been precipitated in Germany's bitter Protestant church fight today by the action of Lutheran bishops last night in walking out of a conference with Reich Bishop Ludwig Mueller.

The bishops, with the Rev. Friedrich Von Bodelschwingh and his supporters in opposition to the reich bishop's Nazi Christian program, abruptly left the meeting called to discuss formation of a church cabinet agreeable to all sides.

Dr. Mueller has been widely described as facing a three-cornered isolation—from Chancellor Hitler, from the German Christians and from the group headed by Dr. Bodelschwingh.

That the reich bishop had fallen into disgrace with Hitler was apparent from the fact that the Chancellor failed to approve the merger of the Protestant Youth movement with the Hitler Youth program, as ordered by Dr. Mueller.

M'NAIR SCORES MAGEE ON TAX EXEMPTIONS

Holds Passage of Plan To Aid Small Homes Up to Ex-Mayor

Mayor-elect William N. McNair and his plan to exempt small homes from taxation in Pittsbrugh were both to be back today from a trip to New York, a visit to Al Smith, a speech on taxation and another excoriation of Councilman-elect William A. Magee.

The Mayor-elect also took time to confer with state Democratic leaders in Philadelphia on plans for including his proposed tax legislation, which he charged the "Grundy henchmen" killed in the Legislature, in next year's political campaign.

TAX EXEMPTION FIRST

The exemption idea was the thing that ranked uppermost in the public mind as applied to McNair, following his announcement yesterday that he will introduce an ordinance in Council to exempt small new homes from taxation for 10 years.

Differing with legal opinion here that the exemption could be granted only by legislative action, the Mayor-elect said it is within his and Council's power. He said he believed it is being done in Bethlehem, Pa.

From Bethlehem it was learned there were no tax exemptions on new homes, but a similar end was accomplished by slashing assessments.

The scheme is to exempt new one-family homes built between April and October from $5,000 of their assessment, regardless of value. Thus a $10,000 home would be assessed at $5,000, if built before a certain date.

The ordinance is the windmill with which McNair tilted yesterday and behind which he found the crouching figure of Magee. He declared:

"Whether that ordinance passes is up to William A. Magee.

"If the small home owners do not get relief in January they can blame Magee.

"He is the man who was given the Democratic nomination after he promised to support my Democratic measures.

"What he has done is not to wait even until he is sworn into office to attack every part of my program for tax relief, five-cent fares and bus fare reduction."

DENOUNCES GRUNDY

Magee received the nomination George E. Evans, prominent contractor, single-taxer and personal friend of McNair's, had won in the primary. It is not recorded that Magee made any promises in accepting the nomination, it was pointed out. McNair has carried on a running fight with him for some days, McNair doing most of the fighting.

It was in favor of a housing project for which Evans is now trying to borrow federal funds that McNair first announced his exemption plan, in an interview with the Sun-Telegraph in Miami, Fla., early this month. Then he declared that the house rents would be lower even than planned if Council would pass a five-year tax exemption on all new homes costing less than $6,000 started in the next few months and completed in reasonable time.

Relief Check Late, Man Slaps Officer

Patrick Torchia, 32, of 318 Eighth street, New Kensington, was to be given a hearing in the New Kensington Police Court today on charges of disorderly conduct, assaulting an officer and resisting arrest.

Police said Torchia, angered when told at welfare headquarters yesterday that his relief check had not arrived, resented Patrolman Walter Bartlick's requests to leave and slapped the officer's face.

BILLS PUT OFF TO PAY POLICE, FIREMEN

Kerr Juggles Funds To Get Christmas Money for Men

Thanks to some last-minute juggling of city money by Dr. James P. Kerr, City Controller, 1,500 police and firemen are being paid today in time for them to do some last-second Christmas shopping.

The ghost was supposed to walk for the 600 firemen yesterday, when their payroll of $66,205 fell due. But the cupboard was almost bare when Dr. Kerr looked yesterday and payment was postponed until today, regular payday for the 900 city policemen.

Both payrolls total $144,544. But there was only $46,000 available in the city treasury this morning, and in order to meet the obligation in time for Christmas, Dr. Kerr stopped the issue of other warrants authorized in payment of numerous city bills.

All other city employes have been paid. Explaining his present difficulties, Dr. Kerr said:

"The Controller's office is not responsible for the collection of taxes and we can only issue warrants for which the money is available. We have made every effort to meet the payroll. The Spann bill, since it was presented to the Legislature, has practically stopped payment of delinquent taxes."

The Spann bill, now awaiting the Governor's signature, would cancel the payment of interest and penalties on delinquent taxes prior to 1934.

PHILA. DRIVERS' STRIKE BROKEN

International News Service.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 23.—Two breaks in the reputedly solid front of the general transportation and delivery strike here — withdrawal of the bakery wagon drivers and the railway express drivers, today was reported to have reduced to approximately 10,000 the number of union workers in the "walkout." out."

The two defections, both of which were voted in order to maintain contract obligations, came with dramatic suddenness last night to end the strike's tension. Police, however, were ordered to redouble vigilance against possible violence.

Meanwhile authorities at Washington and at Harrisburg have taken action to settle the strike, which grew out of the Philadelphiaphia Rapid Transit Company's refusal to grant demands for increased pay and the right to unionize of their drivers.

Adolph Hirschberg, president of the Central Labor Union, with a membership of 200,000 workers, denied that his group would join the general strike, because it would not me "reasonable" support of the President's recovery program.

according to Charles' wife, Mrs. Marie Barton, who said:

"Charles was always afraid of the water."

Ray Simpson, an employe of the enameling company, told police he heard Charles scream "help, fellows," just as he saw the lights of their car head into the creek.

Workers at the plant said the creek at the point where the Barton machine left the road was unusually deep and the current swift.

The accident happened a few minutes after the men finished work on the night shift at 6:45 a. m.

At Charles' home, the Christmas tree decorations were taken to the basement when his wife was told of his death. His 3-year-old daughter, Edith Mae, cried:

"I want my daddy."

Mrs. Barton said simply:

"We cannot have a tree now."

Reginald, who was driving the car, lived with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Barton.

Two other brothers were working in the enameling plant when they heard of the accident.

U. S. AGENCIES PLAN READY

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—(AP.)—Final steps are under way to complete President Roosevelt's preliminary program by the realignment of government agencies.

No indication has been given of the additional changes contemplated.

The score of changes ordered by the President were to have gone into effect by August 10, but a number were deferred to become effective at later dates, the last to be made by December 31. Thousands of employes are involved.

STORE MANAGE FOILS HOLDUP

Suspicious of two men park outside the chain store he manages at 6899 Hamilton avenue, Harry Edwards, of 205 Marion avenue, started out of the store this morning to phone police.

When one of the men pointed a gun at him, Edwards fled down the street, found a telephone, and called No. 6 Police Station. Herald Gaddard, a clerk in the store, locked and bolted the door, and the thwarted bandits leaped into their car and disappeared.

Police, scouring the East End district, arrested Ernest Magone, 24, of 648 Chianti street, who was seen entering his home near where a car answering Edwards' description of the bandits' machine was found.

Identified by the store manager as the gun toter, Magone was held at No. 6 for a hearing tomorrow morning.

Spy Believed Betraying Roosevelt Secrets

International News Service.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Belief that a mysterious spy and "tip-off man" is betraying closely guarded secrets of the Roosevelt administration to the profit of brokers and speculators, grew today in congressional circles as charges accumulated that a "leak" occurred in announcement of the President's silver buying program.

Senator Thomas (Dem.), of Oklahoma, urged an immediate investigation into the charges be launched by the White House.

Thomas revealed the Washington manager for a New York brokerage house called him on the telephone at midnight Sunday to say "there is something big in silver on tap" and to seek detailed information, which was not forthcoming.

A Spokane, Wash., resident declared in a telegram to a Middle Western Senator that brokers in his city were informed regarding the executive order, and the new price for silver, several hours before the official announcement.

The brokers called up their customers urging them to "buy silver and make a big clean-up," the telegram stated.

On Capitol Hill unusual attention was paid to the reputed silver "leak" by reason of persistent reports during recent weeks that other big administration secrets calculated to affect the stock and commodity markets have been "tipped off" to speculators.

Pinchot Elated, Signs Child Labor Ban

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—(AP.)—In the hospital room of Gov. Gifford Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, occurred yesterday a ceremony marking the triumphant march of one of the Governor's favorite causes.

While his wife and 18-year-old son looked on, he signed Pennsylvania's resolution ratifying the child labor amendment to the federal Constitution. Pennsylvania is the twentieth state to approve the amendment. Men and women who have been active in the fight against child labor were also at the Governor's bedside.

Gov. Pinchot said:

"This is the great day of a great cause. Pennsylvania's ratification of the child labor amendment, I believe, insures its passage by the necessary 36 states.

"I am delighted, too, because this happens to be the eighteenth birthday of my son, and because of the great work Mrs. Pinchot has been doing against the employment of child labor in the sweatshops of Pennsylvania."

The Governor's son, Gifford Pinchot, Jr., a student at Yale, came to New York especially for the signing of the resolution.

Gov. Pinchot has been in St. Luke's Hospital for two weeks suffering from shingles.

ALL JAPAN JOYOUS OVER BIRTH OF HEIR TO THRONE

MIKADO HAPPY AS 5TH CHILD IS BOY

Plans Aid to Convicts, Charity as People Stage Festivals

By JAMES R. YOUNG

TOKIO, Dec. 23.—The greatest celebration in Japanese history was staged throughout the country today in honor of the birth of an heir to the Japanese throne, the oldest dynasty in the world. The new prince, a seven-pound, three-ounce infant, is regarded by one hundred million imperial subjects as a direct descendant of the Sun Goddess.

Disappointed four times previously when the Empress Nagako gave birth to daughters, who cannot succeed to the throne, Emperor Hirohito and his subjects, each in his own way, gave way to unbounded rejoicing at this long-awaited event.

HELP FOR PRISONERS

The Emperor will grant widespread amnesty to prisoners, particularly those guilty of political offenses. All awaiting execution, regardless of their crimes, are expected to have their sentences commuted to life imprisonment. Reductions of all prison terms are expected.

The Emperor also announced he would make large donations to orphans' homes, schools and patriotic societies. Honors will be conferred extensively in recognition of the great event.

The public, kept informed of every detail by radio bulletins broadcast every few minutes, was buoyant as it never has been before. Huge, colorful parades were held in every city, town and village in the country.

Stocks soared on the Tokio market, booming upward for an average gain of three points. The national rejoicing was reflected in every phase of Japanese life.

PLAN NAME CEREMONY

The Empress was doing well, and the princeling was described as a healthy baby whose first lusty cries were all that could be desired.

The young heir will be named on the 29th, it was announced, in an elaborate ceremony in a special inner chamber of the Chiyoda Palace. The name will be chosen after lengthy consultation and many suggestions, both from the Emperor and his household, and after referring to old Chinese and Japanese books.

The child was born at 6:37 a. m. today. Shortly before 8 o'clock the Emperor saw his son for the first time, and immediately afterward he visited the Empress. Following the visit of their father, three little imperial daughters, the Princesses Teru, Taka an Yori toddled in to see their new brother.

TOKIO SENT U. S. FELICITATIONS

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—(AP.)—President Roosevelt last night sent a message of congratulation to the Emperor and Empress of Japan upon the birth of a prince.

His message said:

"To their Imperial Majesties, the Emperor and Empress of Japan, Tokio:

"It gives me great pleasure on behalf of the government and people of the United States to congratulate you and the Japanese nation on the birth to your imperial majesties of a son.

"Mrs. Roosevelt and I wish to add an expression of our personal rejoicing in this happy event."

Tap Hostess

FRITZI SCHEFF

FRITZI SCHEFF NOW HOSTESS

WATERBURY, Conn., Dec. 23.—(AP.)—Fritzi Scheff, one-time musical comedy star, pleaded with Judge Newell Jennings, in Superior Court yesterday, to extend the law day in an action brought to foreclose her home and other property on Lake Hitchcock, near Waterbury.

The action is based on a $1,598 judgment, granted some time ago, to the Colonial Trust Company against the singer.

Judge Jennings, after first reserving decision, moved ahead to April 2 the foreclosure date, originally set for next month.

Miss Scheff told the judge she has obtained a job as a hostess in a New York hotel tap room and that she was to begin working last night. She said if allowed two more months, she would be able to pay off the mortgage.

which is not done, for all those our word is this:

"They must, firstly, pray; secondly, pray, and thirdly, continue to pray. We invite them all to pray and persist in their prayers."

Mankind until now, said His Holiness, has "talked too much and too uselessly."

POPE IN GOOD HEALTH

The Pope appeared in excellent health. Garbed in white, he was escorted to the Consistory Hall by the high members of the court.

The Sacred College, in full regalia, and the officials of the Vatican City were assembled there expressly for the traditional ceremony of wishing him "multos Annos"—many years of life.

Cardinal Pignatelli, the dean of the Sacred College, speaking on behalf of them all, declared that the Holy Year, thus far, has been "a magnificent success."

He praised the great "generosity and activity" characterized by the Pope's participation in the year's special ceremonies.

'PEOPLE' SEND WHITE HOUSE GIFT DELUGE

ModestQualityDenotes Popular Tribute; Cards Similar

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—(AP.)—The White House quickened today with the Christmas spirit as the Roosevelts began celebrating their first Yuletide there.

Gift-bearing and card-leaving autos rolled under the broad front portico. Rooms were taken over yesterday in the State Department to handle the White House mail.

Attaches estimated that ten times the usual amount of Christmas gifts were being received, and added that the presents were "more modest," indicating an outpouring from "the people."

Ushers said the callers leaving cards were in "about the same category"—ten times the usual number.

HAILS WRITERS

The President wished a Merry Christmas to a huge press conference yesterday and had it roared back. He received all his White House clerical staff, gave each a book with his greeting written in the fly-leaf.

Already he had given them, along with all the rest of the government workers, today off—with pay. And the Saturday before New Year's, too, a gift that made the President mighty popular in the home town.

Returning from New York Christmas celebrations, both personal and adding to the joy of the poor, Mrs. Roosevelt today was to help give out "family packages" at a traditional theater party for the poor children of the capital. She also will join in the Salvation Army celebration.

FAMILY GATHERS

Hurrying to the capital were other members of the numerous Roosevelt family. The President's mother, Mrs. James Roosevelt, was due to arrive at the White House today. His sons, Franklin, Jr., Harvard student, and John, Groton student, also are expected during the day.

Sunday has been set aside for the greeting of White House policemen, chauffeurs, servants; the reading of Dickens' Christmas carol by the President to his whole household; the Christmas eve lighting of the community tree for the nation in a little park nearby; the decoration of the home Christmas tree, in the second floor hall, by Mrs. Roosevelt and the grown-ups, under presidential supervision; and, just before going to bed, the hanging of Christmas stockings on the President's fireplace.

Christmas morning will begin with stocking-opening; then church. Not until after lunch will the Roosevelts gather about the Christmas tree upstairs to open presents. The President served notice he'd open all his own—personally.

The big family dinner will come Christmas night.

A Visit From Saint Nicholas

By CLEMENT CLARKE MOORE

'Twas the night before Christmas, when all through the house
Not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse;
The stockings were hung by the chimney with care,
In hopes that St. Nicholas soon would be there;
The children were nestled all snug in their beds,
While visions of sugar-plums danced in their heads;
And Mamma in her 'kerchief and I in my cap,
Had just settled our brains for a long winter's nap,
When out on the lawn there arose such a clatter,
I sprang from the bed to see what was the matter;
Away to the window I flew like a flash,
Tore open the shutters and flung up the sash.

The moon on the breast of the new fallen snow
Gave the lustre of midday to objects below;
When what to my wondering eyes should appear
But a miniature sleigh and eight tiny reindeer,
With a little old driver, so lively and quick,
I knew in a moment it must be Saint Nick.
More rapid than eagles his coursers they came,
And he whistled, and shouted, and called them by name:
"Now, Dasher! Now, Dancer! Now, Prancer and Vixen!
On, Comet! On, Cupid! On, Donder and Blitzen!
To the top of the porch! To the top of the wall!
Now dash away! Dash away! Dash away all!"

As dry leaves that before the wild hurricane fly
When they meet with an obstacle, mount to the sky,
So up to the house-top the coursers they flew,
With the sleigh full of toys, and St. Nicholas, too.
And then, in a twinkling, I heard on the roof
The prancing and pawing of each little hoof;
As I drew in my head and was turning around,
Down the chimney St. Nicholas came with a bound;
He was dressed all in furs from his head to his foot,
And his clothes were all tarnished with ashes and soot;
A bundle of toys he had flung on his back,
And he looked like a peddler just opening his pack.

His eyes—how they twinkled! His dimples how merry!
His cheeks were like roses, his nose like a cherry!
His droll little mouth was drawn up like a bow,
And the beard of his chin was as white as the snow;
The stump of a pipe he held tight in his teeth,
And the smoke it encircled his head like a wreath;
He had a broad face and a little round belly
That shook, when he laughed, like a bowlful of jelly.
He was chubby and plump, a right jolly old elf,
And I laughed when I saw him, in spite of myself;
A wink of his eye and a twist of his head,
Soon gave me to know I had nothing to dread.

He spoke not a word, but went straight to his work,
And filled all the stockings, then turned with a jerk,
And laying his fingers aside of his nose,
And giving a nod, up the chimney he rose;
He sprang to his sleigh, to his team gave a whistle,
And away they all flew, like the down off a thistle,
But I heard him exclaim, ere he drove out of sight,
"Merry Christmas to all, and to all a good-night."

WOMEN FLIERS TO EAT TURKEY

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 23.—(AP.)—Frances Marsalis and Helen Richey put in their order for a full course turkey dinner for Christmas as their plane today neared the three-day mark in their attempt to better the endurance record of eight days and four hours. The order was contained in a brief note dropped on the airport last night.

They continued today their flights away from the immediate vicinity of the municipal field, flying over Miami proper and short distances over the ocean, about five miles west of the airport.

Airport attendants grew more optimistic over the chances of success as the flight neared the three-day period, and expressed themselves as believing both the plane and its pilots have "settled down."

MARION DAVIES GIVES PARTY FOR NEEDY

Young, Old Get Toys And Food at Annual Christmas Fete

By MARJORIE DRISCOLL
Universal Service.

HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 23.—Said a weary but still smiling police officer, carefully herding the last toy-laden child out of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer gates yesterday:

"That was SOME party!"

Five thousand youngsters and their parents thought so, too; children who went home with their arms full of dolls and scooters and roller skates and candy; parents who carried enormous baskets spilling over with turkeys and groceries and sacks of potatoes.

It happens every year at the studio, when Marion Davies gives her annual Christmas party for as many children and their parents as can crowd into the big stages, families who, without her kindly thought, would have a very slim Christmas.

ENTER, SANTA CLAUS

They were there before daylight, waiting outside the big gates, clutching the precious tags that meant admission into a land of wonder. And by 9 o'clock, the huge sound stage where, before present-giving time, there was a show that the children loved, was so packed that the late-comers had to take their program at second-hand.

It was just the kind of a show to give to that kind of an audience; plenty of comedy, plenty of excitement, mystifying magic, thrills and fun, and many of Hollywood's famous stars participated.

Bill Hogan and his orchestra played tunes that set small feet tapping, and then came Santa Claus.

GIFTS JAM WAREHOUSE

All the rest of the year his name is Sidney Jarvis, but for five Christmases he has been the most jovial, the merriest, the friendliest Santa Claus who ever chuckled behind a white beard. A Marion Davies Christmas party without Sidney Jarvis as Santa Claus wouldn't be the same.

He capered out on the stage and the last small skeptic in the audience succumbed. There WAS a Santa Claus.

And after the show came the presents!

Into a huge warehouse, stacked with gifts and lined with aisles, went the children and their parents. There was something for every child; dolls nearly as big as the small girls who received them into loving arms, bright red wagons, scooters and pedal cars, skates and trains, and a box of candy for everybody.

1,104 BASKETS GIVEN

A score of police officers helped the studio staff, and it was a tall policeman who led the first child through the warehouse door; a little girl whose twisted body swung painfully along on crutches, but whose white face was radiant with joy. After her came the big parade; very small people speechless with happiness, old boys and girls gloating over their treasures.

And to make it complete, 1,104 Christmas dinner baskets and 1,104 16-pound sacks of potatoes were given to mothers and fathers whose need is very great.

They were a tired crowd at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer when the party was over—all the studio people who worked long hours to make it a success, but they didn't care.

It was worth it.

Cripple, Father Slayer, Freed for Christmas

Mrs. Stanley Kisiel, of 417 Beech way, Duquesne, whose home had promised to be one of the saddest this Christmas season, was cheered late yesterday when District Attorney Andrew T. Park arranged for her crippled son, Theodore, 20, to go home from the county jail, without bail, until the court summons him to be tried for the killing of his father.

December 4, the boy revolted after his father had struck him with a hatchet and, seizing a gun, shot and killed the parent.

Just before court adjourned over the Christmas holiday, Park had Kisiel taken before Judge Sylvester J. Snee, where he moved that Theodore be released without bail in his mother's custody. Park said:

"Your honor, I have gone carefully into the facts of this case and into the boy's past life. Not only has he been crippled, but his father, I have learned, constantly beat both him and his mother.

"In spite of the charge of murder that stands against him, I am convinced he is not a criminal. The poor mother could not raise bail, but I do not think bail is necessary, and ask that you release him in her recognizance."

Judge Snee at once granted the motion, with the remark to Kisiel:

"You have a very good friend in the District Attorney. You may go home with your mother and the court wishes you and your mother a happy Christmas together."

'Sleeping Beauty' Smile Thrills Her Mother

OAK PARK, Ill., Dec. 23.—(AP.)—A smile may just be a little thing, but when it comes in response to a mother's pleading from a girl who has lain unconscious almost two years, it is "one of the biggest things in life."

So it was described today by Mrs. Peter Miley, mother of 28-year-old Patricia Maguire, a victim of sleeping sickness since February 15, 1932.

With cheerful words but a hint of tears in her eyes, Mrs. Miley related incidents of the last 48 hours that are giving the family increasing hope—and the doctor, she said, encouragement—that "Pat" is nearing consciousness.

Pat seems to the mother who, regardless of any possible risk to herself, has slept beside her from the night she was taken ill—for the girl in her restlessness would have thrown herself from the bed—to have become gradually more aware of her surroundings.

The mother said:

"When Pat regains her ability to speak I want her to repeat her very last words as she lost consciousness."

And then for the first time the mother told of those dramatic moments.

The girl had been feeling terribly tired and complained of being sleepy. Realizing she was ill, the mother summoned the doctor. He warned:

"Don't kiss Pat."

The mother stood by watching her daughter lose her battle for consciousness. Pat struggled to speak—her words coming slow and thick-tongued:

"Mother—just—kiss me."

Mrs. Miley said:

"Of course I did, warning or no warning. She has never spoken a word anyone could understand since."

The Story of David -:- CHAPTER VIII -:- Told in Pictures by Dan Smith

When David demurred that he was a poor man, not fitted to be a king's son-in-law, Saul sent word to David that he need have no dowry, but if David would slay one hundred Philistines he might have Saul's daughter Michal for his wife. For Saul thought thus to make David fall by the hand of the Philistines. But this pleased David well, and he and his men slew two hundred Philistines. And Saul gave him Michal to wife.

Then Saul spoke to his son Jonathan and his servants that they should kill David. But Jonathan warned David to hide until morning. Then Jonathan spoke good of David to his father and urged him to spare David. (Continued next week)

Saul swore to Jonathan that David should not be slain, but when David again had fought the Philistines and put them to flight, an evil spirit from the Lord was upon Saul, and he sat in his house with his javelin in his hand.

PITT CATHEDRAL COMPLETION WITH CWA CASH LOOMS

2,100 GET PAY CHECKS FOR CHRISTMAS

A completed Cathedral of Learning loomed today as Chancellor John G. Bowman, of the University of Pittsburgh, awaited approval of plans submitted to Eric H. Biddle, state Civil Works Administer, for resumption of work on the building, with CWA assistance.

Chancellor Bowman said:

"We shall start immediately upon receiving the sanction of the state administration. I expect the project to provide work for 800 to 1,000 men."

According to the statement required in CWA plans, the Cathedral is now 60 per cent finished. The amount already spent on the edifice is $4,900,000.

PAY CHECKS OUT

Uncle Sam and Santa Claus were to team up today and present two pay checks to each of the 2,100 Civil Works employes in the city.

Salaries due workers from the December 4 payroll were to be paid today at seven CWA branch offices throughout Pittsburgh. The payroll for the county for December 21, listing 5,200 employes, is to be paid next week with men and women in Pittsburgh getting checks early in the week.

The appointment of Harold F. Bucher, recently dismissed director of the State-Federal Employment Bureau, to the CWA personnel force was announced yesterday. Bucher is interviewing applicants for engineering positions on the city CWA staff.

DAM WORK PLANNED

Work on the Montgomery Dam, near Beaver, will start the first week in January, according to the engineering office of the War Department here. The project will require the expenditure of two and a half milion dollars.

Labor requirements will provide employment for 2,500 men, almost all residents of Beaver County.

Construction of the $1,000,000 dam on the Allegheny River, near Aspinwall, is employing about 60 men. The total will rise to 300, it is said, and the manufacturing of necessary tools and materials will open jobs for about 900.

Since August 30, when the first corps of workers was started on a flood control program, 134,091 jobs have been scattered throughout the nation.

3 MEN FREED IN OHIO FIRE

Indictments charging Sam Neaman, 42, an insurance adjuster, of Brownsville road; Paul Childs, 29, a druggist, of Beechwood boulevard, and Jack Hirsch, alias Ben Hirsch, of Travella boulevard, East End, with first-degree murder in connection with the Ellington Apartments fire in Cleveland in 1932, were quashed in court there yesterday. Twelve persons were killed in the fire.

Louis J. Kamons, 48, of Squirrel Hill, recently acquitted of a charge of murder, remains in jail in Cleveland, according to an Associated Press dispatch, facing murder charges in connection with the deaths of the remaining 11. A plea to quash the indictment against Kamons was refused.

North Sider Heads Real Estate Board

E. Herbert Gilg, of the North Side Real Estate Company, has been elected president of the Pittsburgh Real Estate Board. Gilg, who has been third vice president, succeeds R. T. Mackintosh.

Other officers elected by the governors of the board are: Vice presidents, John L. Walsh, R. L. McKallip and James F. Gilson; secretary, Harry A. Noah; treasurer, Fred J. Hettling, and counsel, Robert W. Semenow.

Bureau Takes CWA Nurse Applications

ENGLISH CHRISTMAS BREAD

Part 1—About 5 p. m. put two cakes Fleishman's compressed yeast in a small bowl of warm water. While this dissolves, put four quarts of tepid water in a large kettle, sifting in flour and stirring until the sponge or dough drops quite stiffly from spoon. Add yeast. The kettle should be one-half full. Cover and set in warm place. Let raise until the kettle is full, which will be about 9 p. m.

While Part 1 or the sponge is raising, sift seven quarts of flour into a large bread pan. To this add the following ingredients:

Three tablespoons salt.
Two tablespoons nutmeg.
Four tablespoons cinnamon.
Three pounds brown sugar.
Two pounds granulated sugar
Two pounds seeded raisins, cut in two.
One pound seedless raisins.
One-half cup candied citron, cut fine.
One-half cup candied leman, cut fine.
One pound currants.

Have this thoroughly warmed through by the time Part 1 has filled the kettle. Pour Part 1 or sponge on top of ingredients in large pan. Before kneading drop four eggs into sponge and mix into sponge with hands. Have one-fourth pound lard and one-fourth pound butter, melted. Pour this also on top of sponge. Work in flour and fruit from bottom of pan. Let raise in large pan until morning. Make out in loaves and raise to almost double size. Do not raise too light. Bake slowly one hour. Keep in crocks or tin cans. This bread has a fined flavor if kept several weeks.

Non-Residents Bound By New Auto Law

The new financial responsibility law for automobile owners and drivers will be effective January 1 in Pennsylvania. The Sun-Telegraph has obtained a resume of the law from the State Department of Revenue and the Pittsburgh Motor Club.

The following is a continuation of a series of questions and answers designed to clarify the requirements.

Q—Does a person have to furnish proof of financial responsibility if he is willing to give up his operating privilege?

A—A person who comes within the provisions of this act is not necessarily obliged to furnish proof of financial responsibility, but must do so if he hopes to retain his operating privilege (and in some cases continue the registration of his cars).

Q—Will a non-resident of Pennsylvania have to file proof of financial responsibility under any condition?

A—Non-residents come within the same restrictions as the residents if they care to enjoy the privilege of operating motor vehicles in this state. Pennsylvania will not, however, require proof of financial responsibility from non-residents simply because they have had to furnish proof in their own state.

Q.—If a person is a joint owner of a motor vehicle and becomes involved in accidents which require proof of financial responsibility, will it be necessary for the other owner to also file proof?

A—Not if proof is required solely because of the accident, and there is no judgment rendered. If, however, as a result of the accident, both owners are sued jointly and a judgment obtained in excess of $200, both owners must then furnish proof of financial responsibility before they will be allowed to operate and to register cars in Pennsylvania.

Q—In case of a truck driver or chauffeur (whose employer carries insurance) coming within this Act, would that insurance suffice?

A—It would not. He would have to provide full coverage on any car or truck which he might drive.

SAILOR AT MAIL TRUCK WHEEL

'At Sea' First Day But Now He Likes Emergency Job

Can you picture a U. S. Navy seaman delivering Uncle Sam's mail?

Such is the life during the Christmas holidays of Shelby Turner, who has been on some of the Navy's fleetest submarines and battleships. But he likes it!

Two months ago the 29-year-old sailor was transferred to the North Side recruiting station from the U. S. S. Tennessee. Work is slack there during the holidays so he was sent with a Navy truck to the North Side postoffice to help with the mail rush.

Of his new job, Turney, who hails from Fresno, Cal., said:

"This is much easier than taking orders on a sub or battleship. But the first day I was as much at sea with the mail as I was the first day on the ocean."

Turner's job is to drive the truck. Sub-carrier Oliver W. Argentah, of 240 Irwin avenue, Bellevue, who won the Italian Cross of Valor in the air service during the World War, does the actual handling of the mail.

BARE ANOTHER ROAD BUNGLE IN COUNTY

Another road blunder, involving excess expenditure of perhaps $100,000, and nearer home than the famous Nadine "bottleneck," today confronted Commissioner C. C. McGovern and his board.

It was revealed when the Commissioners authorized an investigation by Main & Company into the Stoops Ferry-Shousetown road yesterday. The road, a three-lane, mile and a tenth stretch, leads almost up to the doorway of McGovern's Moon Township residence.

McGovern characterized the road as:

"A great farce. Engineering debauchery."

It was crooked, he said, where it should have been straight, and graded where it should have been level. It was engineered so as to require two expensive bridges where no bridges were necessary, he stated. A creek bed, he charged, had been changed and now had to be put back in place.

Investigation was ordered into:

"Supervision and construction of the road and the method by which it was built under the direction of the Controller's engineer."

It is the duty of the Controller's engineer to see the road comes up to specifications. McGovern, however, admitted the physical work on the road had been done directly under the auspices of the Commissioners.

Final cost of the bungled roadwork cannot be determined until the special audit is completed.

Patricia Pitt's Sprightly Comment on Pittsburgh Society Happenings

In Mayfair
—With—
Patricia Pitt

A forest of fragrant Christmas trees, sparkling with silver icicles, was the ballroom for guests at Peggy Robinson's debut ball last night in the Pittsburgh Golf Club, one of the most beautiful entertainments of the season.

Her father and mother, the William M. Robinsons, gave the dance. And in addition to the veritable forest of Christmas trees, silver and green entwined the lights, trimmed the windows of the club and the balcony railing. Another miniature forest was the musicians' place for the evening.

Yuletide Forests Scene Of Holiday Debut Dances

The cute little deb wore a gown of shell-pink lame and pleated pink tulle. Pleated ruffles of the tulle formed a peplum at the hipline! And a fluff of pleated tulle formed brief sleeves. She carried a muff of gold lace and sweetheart roses. Her mother chose soft grey velvet with rhinestone and choral clips for decoration, and had a corsage of green orchids.

Before the dance there was another debutante party, a dinner-dance, which the John Blair Suttons gave in the Allegheny Country Club to present Mr. Sutton's daughter, charming Mary Ormsby Sutton. Pine trees formed a background for the receiving line.

The debutante wore a gown of white crepe, cut in a subtle fashion, with ruching of the crepe as the only decoration. Mrs. Sutton wore black velvet.

There was an entertainment yesterday which, although not called a debut party, really was—at least there's to be no more formal affairs for her.

I'm referring to the tea Jerome Hill gave in his home late yesterday afternoon in honor of Katharine MacConnell, debutante daughter of Mrs. Thomas J. MacConnell, Jr., of Warwick terrace.

Marnie Hodge Bows At Yule Tea-Dance

This morning the buds caught up on their beauty sleep, and this afternoon went to another debutante party—Marnie Hodge's coming-out tea-dance her parents, the junior Edwin Hodges, and her grandmother, Mrs. William G. Clyde, gave in the Twentieth Century Club.

Silver-trimmed Christmas trees, vivid poinsettias and gift bouquets decorated the clubhouse. The debutante chose an interesting Yuletide gown—of gold star lame—that is, when the light fell on it, the stars gleamed. It had no trimming. The sleeves were long, and the bodice was slightly decollete in back. Her hat was of green velvet. Her mother wore green bagheera.

Suzanne Trimble Names February Wedding Day

We're going to have at least one interesting wedding in February. Suzanne Trimble, the Harcourt Newell Trimbles' daughter, has named Friday, February 2, as the date for her marriage to Robert Henry Forman Snyder, of New York and South Orange, N. J., son of the Clayton Snyders, of South Orange. Suzanne's engagement was made known in July.

Alice and Gertrude Walton, Grace Austen and Vee Shakarian will spend the holidays in Miami Beach, Fla.

The A. Q. Starrs, of Denniston avenue, announced at a dinner last night in their home, the engagement of their daughter, Violetta Quigley Starr, to Jonathan Currier Willey, son of the Raymond Willeys, of Beacon street.

The wedding's to take place some time after Mr. Wiley is graduated from Princeton in the spring.

Miss Stevenson Makes Bow in New York

Dr. and Mrs. James Morley Hitzrot, of New York, and the Otis Norton Shepards, also of New York, gave a dinner dance jointly last evening in the Japanese Room of the St. Regis, New York, to introduce Miss Barbara Stevenson, daughter of the Walter E. Stevensons, of New Canaan, Conn., former residents of Pittsburgh, and Kate Peck Shepard.

The guests were received by Mrs. Hitzrot, Mrs. Shepard, Mrs. Stevenson and the debutantes. The room was decorated with Christmas greens, mistletoe, poinsettias and holly and the tables at which the guests were seated in groups of eight and 10 were decorated with small Christmas trees. Christmas trees screened the orchestra platform.

PANTING FOR SUNNY CLIMES

By PRUNELLA WOOD

GOOD LOOKING Amazons who want to be in the fashionable swim can take a tip from Clarepotter, that enterprising young designer who knows her Americans because she is one.

She has put her finger on the inner yearnings of most up and coming girls, which is an even break to feel comfortable while looking really swank. Not so easy, either, as witness the horrors of the Mother Hubbard, the lack of helpful lines in even the most richly embroidered smock, and so on. Seekers after the sun will appropriate the Clarepotter resort clothes happily.

Right, oyster white linen in shirt and shorts for speedy tennis, and a skirt as a frock transformation.

Left, "baby pants in heavy brown wool, worn with a tawny striped jersey. It is a costume that will be excellent to cover the waterfront from dunes to decks.

TELL IT TO ELSIE

Follow This Unusual Feature Day by Day

By ELSIE ROBINSON

Life Goes On No Matter How Badly We Blunder

Do you throw tantrums, just "for the fun of making up?" Alicia did—and now look what's happened!

Dear Miss Robinson:

I suppose you will say that I am just a plain fool, when you read this—and I guess you are right. I brought this problem on myself, but I hope that you can help me. I am terribly unhappy.

A year and a half ago I met a wonderful man and began to go out with him. We fell in love with each other, and he asked me to marry him. I promised that I would. We were devoted to each other, and he gave me a beautiful diamond. Needless to say, I was just about the happiest girl in the world.

Then, about eight months ago, he lost his job and had to give up his car and stop taking me around so much. I loved him, but I found myself getting discontented. Friends gave me bad advice, too—which unfortunately I took.

BECAME ANGRY

They told me that I shouldn't let him be too sure of me, but to act indifferent at times. I did this. More than that, I overdid it. I guess it was probably my discontent and resentment of conditions that kept us from enjoying life as we had, and put our marriage off.

Finally, he told me that he thought I was acting odd, and asked why. That made me mad, and I blew up and said a lot of things, feeling sure that he would overlook them, as he had in the past. But instead, he walked out.

At first I didn't take that seriously. I was such a fool that I thought he loved me so much he would never be able to stay away. But he did, and now I am so broken-hearted I don't know what to do. I couldn't believe it, when days went by and I didn't hear from him. I was stunned. I phoned him, and he was very cold and short with me.

LEARNED LESSON

I was desperate, almost frantic. So I asked my sister to talk to him. She and my mother had both told me that my "nasty disposition" would get me in dutch some day, but I didn't believe them.

I always thought it was fun to get up an argument, and then make up. I was always wildly happy when after we quarreled, he would take me in his arms and say, "Now dear, let's forget it. It's silly to spar with each other like this."

But now I am almost crazy, wishing I had never been like that, because my sister finally saw Tom and told him how sorry I was, and how I wanted him to come back. And he said:

"It was nice of her to admit she was wrong, but she is just selfish. 'Love' is just a word in the dictionary to her."

That just broke my heart all over again. And it isn't true. I do love him devotedly, and if he would just come back I would never, never pick a fight with him again. I have learned my lesson. Maybe I was selfish once, but no more. If I can just get him back, I will be so different. But I don't know how to do that. Can you help me? What shall I do? ALICIA.

What'll you do?

Go to him yourself, my dear. He is carrying in his hurt heart and disgusted mind the picture of a silly, selfish, bad-tempered, bum sport. Show him another picture. Show him that you have changed—that you're really the girl he once thought you were.

How can you show him. By proving it. He may not—he probably won't—believe it the first time. Then take it gamely. Don't cry. Don't throw a tantrum. Don't pester him with letters and phone calls. Wait a little while, and then go back to him again.

GO ON TRYING

Humiliating? Of course it is. But you brought it on yourself, child. And hard as you may have to work, love is worth anything it costs.

But am I sure that will win him back? Of course I'm not. You can't play with love—kick it around like a football.—and expect it to be all new and shiny when you pick it up again. You may have kicked this love around once too often. And if you have, then you'll have to grin and bear it.

For life must go on, little girl, no matter how badly we blunder. And that hurts plenty. But if we've learned our lesson there's always a new happiness for one that we've lost. So try bravely to make up. And if it's too late, go on trying, anyhow. Someday life will give you another chance. Be ready for it!

And here's hoping that he reads this, youngster, and lets his heart melt a little. For I suspect he'll be losing something pretty fine if he lets you go—now.

'OFF WITH THE OLD LOVE'

Drawn by Nell Brinkley

Off with you pretty girl whose sleek face, so perfectly techniqued, looks at me from every magazine page cover! Golden hair like silver-gilt silk, black hair like smoke from night's own witch-fires, brown hair like the gloss on the mink of the forests, eyes with the pellucid colorings of sapphires, topazes, emeralds, and onyx, faces with fixed youthful smiles, porcelain smooth, I have seen you all year long every time I spent a dime, fifteen cents, and a quarter (the thirty-fives and fifties don't often have YOU on their cover-lids), for something to look at on the train.

But off you come now, to make room for a less beautiful face, but a much more fascinating face, that is seasonal. Whose hair is the platinumest blonde you can think of—it is like the floss on a milk-weed pod; the cloth that a faery's dress is made of: it is spun silver; faery-tale candy spun into next to nothing at all. And it shines like the light that illumines all romances and faery-tales, instead of the sun. The cover is a he, by the way. His eyes are blue as Gordon Grant's summer skies in his sea-scapes. They shine like the sun on a piece of glass held in a little boy's hand. He wears a fur cap, completely out of date. Maybe his mother made it when he was a little boy. He wears fur on his coat. The coat is red as red, and the fur is white as white. He is very jolly, and his nose is rosey red. He is the boy of the hour, the new deal in magazine covers.

To childhood he is handsomer than the prettiest girl that goes. He is beloved. He gets the fan-mail for a few weeks. The adored of the little people. Saint Nicholas; Old Kris; Santa Claus.

He who helps the Saint of the children to keep faith with them can go to sleep with a broad smile. His conscience is feather-weight, and his heart can be mistaken for a rubber-ball!

—NELL BRINKLEY.

'Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

Who Goes First?

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please advise me as to what is the correct way for a young man to escort his lady friend down the aisle in a theater? Should he walk before her when there is an usher? Three young man have argued over this question and have decided to let you answer it for them. W.

Every man must decide this question for himself, for it is he who must decide which precedence he thinks is the more appropriate and of more service to his woman companion or companions. Most men consider that it is better to stand aside and allow the woman to go first, to follow the usher. But I can't help agreeing with the comparatively small number of men who are of the opinion that it is more "serviceable" for them to follow the usher, so that they may see that they are given the right seats, and then stand at the head of the row, to allow the woman to take her place in the indicated seat.

And I think, too, although it is contrary to the usual custom, that in the similar instances where the woman is supposed to follow the head-waiter, that it is far more helpful (and masterful!) for the man to follow the head-waiter, to see that he and his companion are given the table he wishes.

But since there are two schools of thought about both of these circumstances, the girl must get the habit of watching to see to what school of thought her escort belongs.

Appreciation

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am a recent college graduate and a short while ago an executive of a large firm secured a position for me. The salary is small. However, he is interested in me and is trying to see that I am advanced. Would it be proper to show my earnest and deep appreciation for his kindness by a Christmas gift? If so, what would be appropriate? Bill.

Under these circumstances it would be more appropriate, I am sure, if, instead of sending this kind man a Christmas gift, you would write him a Christmas letter, expressing to him your appreciation (I hope that you use your own fine and forthright phrase "earnest and deep appreciation) of his great goodness and kindness to you. I am confident that he would appreciate such a letter from you far more than he would a gift.

And before you write this letter, Bill, get some appropriate letter paper on which to write it. Don't, please, use the lined paper on which you wrote to me. Get some plain white paper, of good texture, and of the generous size appropriate for the correspondence of men.

Contract Bridge

HOW TO PLAY and HOW TO WIN

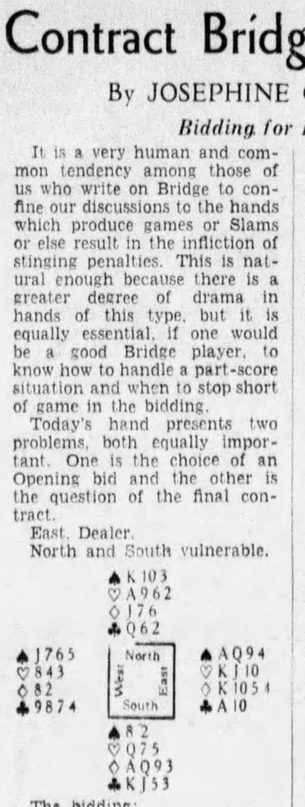
By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

Bidding for Part-Scores

It is a very human and common tendency among those of us who write on Bridge to confine our discussions to the hands which produce games or Slams or else result in the infliction of stinging penalties. This is natural enough because there is a greater degree of drama in hands of this type, but it is equally essential, if one would be a good Bridge player, to know how to handle a part-score situation and when to stop short of game in the bidding.

Today's hand presents two problems, both equally important. One is the choice of an Opening bid and the other is the question of the final contract.

East, Dealer.
North and South vulnerable.



The bidding:

East	South	West	North
1 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

With East's hand, players who have been told that a hand containing tenaces should be bid at notrump would be certain to make the glaring error of opening with that bid. East has four honor-tricks and tenaces or potential tenaces in every suit. Certainly if there is anything in the theory of its being advantageous to get leads up to tenaces, this hand is one at which this advantage should be very great. As a matter of fact, usually an Opening bid of one notrump would be the worst conceivable bid. The result of an Opening notrump bid would be that every player around the table would pass and East would be defeated. With the choice of a spade as an Opening bid, while East and West cannot reach a game contract they can make a valuable part-score, which is far more profitable than going down to defeat.

The West hand does not contain the playing-tricks for even a shaded Raise, and, unpleasant as is the passing of a partner's Opening bid, this is one of the rare cases where prudence dictates that course. For West to raise with his nearly trickless holding, even with adequate trump support, might well result in East playing the hand at an utterly unmakable contract and also doubled.

Child's 'House of Health'

By LISA GRENELLE

Are you letting your child build his house of straw or sticks—or are you insisting that he construct it of brick? Are you making sure that it shall be strong enough to withstand the assaults of the big, bad wolf, so that, though he "huff and he puff," he cannot "blow it right in?"

The two little pigs who built their homes of straw and sticks had a pretty good time of it. Straw and sticks are easy to handle, cheaper than bricks, too, and quicker and easier to work with. So quick and easy to work with that there is time to spare to play and sing and dance. But when the big, bad wolf comes along—what?

All children will build their homes of straw or sticks if you let them. All children will eat candy and ice cream and leave the spinach; shirk at their lessons, squander their pennies, stay up late and cry, rather than work, for what they want.

Because a child takes no reckoning of the future. At an early age he knows that two and two make four—in figures; but it takes him a long time and costs him many a painful experience to learn that the same law applies to life.

But you know it. You know that the big, bad wolves of sickness and ill fortune are always lurking about. You know that a child who eats irregularly of a badly balanced diet, stays up late, gets insufficient fresh air and exercise, is bound to reach maturity — strong though he may have been as a baby—without any power of resistance against disease, an easy prey to the big, bad wolf of contagion.

Don't let your child be dependent upon the skill of a clever doctor. Don't let him need it. Start him right. Send him into the world equipped for defense against this big, bad wolf, with a sound body built up through regular healthy habits; sound mentality brought about by lessons in concentration and self-control.

Consult a child specialist or the nearest clinic as to your child's proper diet, even if he does appear healthy. Have his meals on time. Insist that he take time in eating them. And let him take it easy after his heavy meal—no engagements for at least half an hour, either duty or play.

And don't get lax about his bedtime. A growing child needs a great deal of rest, not only because he is growing so rapidly physically, but for his nerves and emotional development as well.

See that he gets plenty of fresh air. Reluctance of a child to go outdoors often can be rectified by giving him only outdoor toys, and teaching him outdoor sports suited to his age.

Avis Arrives—With 'Green Silver' Dress

The air was winey, the car functioning perfectly, and there was little traffic. Dicky drove with his usual experience, and despite the pace he set and held, I settled back against the cushions with the first feeling of relaxation I had had for days. This hour of respite at least was mine.

"What'll we do with the polecat when we gather her up?" Dicky asked, as we neared the Patchogue station. "There's only one stipulation I have to make. She doesn't sit with the driver."

"Nor with me," I retorted firmly. She's going to have the whole rear seat of this sedan all to herself. I brought a robe and a pillow along, and she can curl up and go to sleep if she so chooses."

"Not she," Dicky said sapiently. "She won't spoil her paint job, and she's probably all set to wheedle you upon the subjects of the bridesmaid's gown and seeing Noel."

He was true prophet. When we had parked the car and entered the station, Avis came forward to meet us with disappointment written upon her carefully made up face.

"Didn't Noel come?" she asked pathetically. "I thought you said he would come to meet me."

"I'm afraid you must have misunderstood me," I said, knowing that she was lying, and not loath to join the Saphira Club myself for this one session. "Did you say anything about Noel meeting you? The telephone was so terribly out of order that it's a wonder you understood that anybody was coming after you."

DISAPPOINTMENT

"I certainly asked to have Noel come after me," she said with some acerbity. "I wanted to have just this little time to talk to him. But I suppose I'll have to make the best of it, and try to find an opportunity before we all go to bed tonight."

"Where are your things?" I asked her hastily, to forestall any further appeals to me to help her talk to Noel alone.

"Right here," she said, indicating a suitcase, a hatbox and an immense pasteboard box.

I saw Dicky's eyebrows go up, for he hates carrying parcels, and there was no porter or handyman to be seen. But he gallantly gathered them up and motioned us to go on ahead of him.

"That box is a bother, I know," Avis said with saccharine apology. "I'm sorry it's so big. But I just had to bring my green and silver dress and my hat, to show you how beautifully they would fit in with your color scheme — so much better for me than the dresses Mrs. Brixton selected. That color is wonderful for Carolyn—naturally Mrs. Brixton would think only of her own daughter—but it's simply awful for me!"

"I'm sure you're mistaken, Avis," I told her, feeling that if I heard much more of this twaddle I would not be responsible for my itching fingers. "But let us not talk of it now. We have a long and fatiguing drive before us. You would better rest, so as to be fresh for tomorrow. I have a robe and pillow in the back of the car, so you can curl up and go to sleep if you wish."

WANTS FRONT SEAT

"Oh! I'm far too excited to sleep," she gurgled, and went on chattering about how "thrilled to tears" she was at the chance of being a bridesmaid. She was still talking rapidly when we reached the car, and I was not prepared for the adroitness with which she held open the rear door of the car and put her hand upon my arm to help me inside.

"You are the one who needs a robe and a pillow, dear Mrs. Graham," she said sweetly. "You must be terribly tired; and then I've put you to so much extra trouble. If I'd known you were going to come after me, I would have waited and come with Uncle Phil. No," as I drew back and began an expostulation, "I don't mind riding in front at all. I must insist upon your taking this comfy seat, unless, of course, you don't like my sitting with Mr. Graham. But if I promise not to vamp him even the teeniest little bit, won't you let me sit with him?"

Dicky was absorbed in trying to stow the luggage into the trunk, and I let a sudden mischievous impulse have its way with me. After all, I owed him sometimes for his atrocious gibe anent Hugh Grantland, just before we started upon this little trip.

"You don't need to promise anything," I told Avis, with a careless little laugh. "I shall be very glad to curl up in the back seat. It's very sweet of you to insist upon it."

"What's all this?" Dicky demanded, coming from the rear of the car with the big dress box Avis had brought with her. He put a restraining hand upon my arm as I was about to enter the car. "What do you think you're doing?"

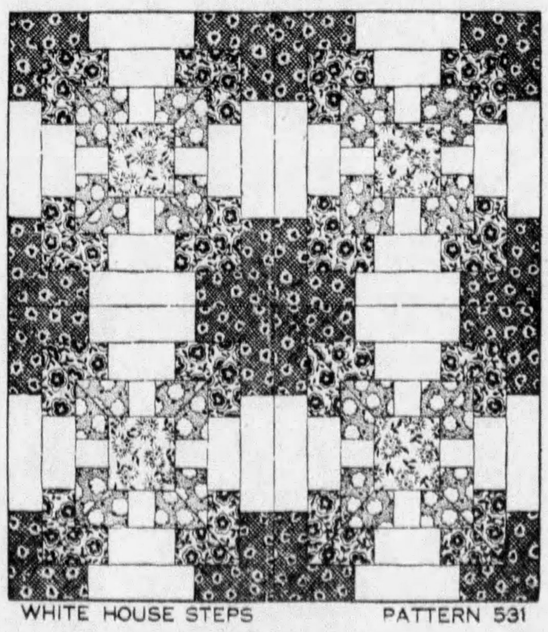
LAURA WHEELER DESIGNS



Unusual Scrap Quilt

In olden times the events of the day inspired the quiltmaker with names for her quilts. Today the NRA movement has centered the eyes of the entire country on the White House and it seems especially fitting to commemorate this with a quilt—White House Steps. Like Washington Pavement and Pineapple, it is a quilt block which you start at the center and sew the patches on round and round. As in these quilts, too, the pattern pieces, with the exception of the center patch, are all of one width. This permits cutting the material into strips and then cutting the patches to the size needed. This pattern is most effective when the materials are shaded from a dark to a light shade of one color. A shaded chain results, making a very decorative quilt. Color suggestions are included with the pattern.

Pattern 531 comes to you with complete, simple instructions for cutting, sewing and finishing, together with yardage chart, diagram of quilt to help arrange the blocks for single and double bed size, and a diagram of block which serves as a guide for placing the patches and suggests contrasting materials.

Send 10 cents for this pattern to Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph Needlecraft Department, 82 Eighth avenue, New York City.

Household Hints

Scrub with the grain of the wood for best results.

You will find that a piece of butter improves even the creamiest baked rice pudding; potatoes, if they are boiled; carrots, turnips and parsnips; grilled steak; baked apples—with a little brown sugar; boiled peas or French beans.

Beware of Pneumonia These Changeable Days

I can think of no other disease more feared or more properly dreaded than pneumonia. John Bunyan referred to consumption as the "captain of the men of death." Osler said the same term should be applied to pneumonia. In spite of the tremendous advances made in the discovery of new germs and the treatment of disease, no specific cure has been found for pneumonia.

Dr. Copeland

You will recall that during the summer I warned against this disease and said that it respects neither age nor sex. Of course, it is more common during cold and changeable weather. It is dreaded because of its sudden onset and its rapid and stormy progress.

Pneumonia is an inflammation of the lungs. It commonly follows a simple cold or other infection of the nose, throat or ears. Often it appears without any warning, but in most instances it can be traced to severe chilling of the body or exposure to drafts, cold or dampness. Simply passing from a warm room to cold outside air, improperly clothed to meet the change of temperature, may be sufficient to lower the vitality enough for the pneumonia germs to begin their work.

Pneumonia occurs, too, as a complication of some infectious disease. It is especially common in underweight and undernourished children, following severe attacks of measles, whooping cough, scarlet fever, and other infectious diseases. In adults, it may appear as a sequel to excessive fatigue, lack of proper food, and carelessness of the general health of the body.

Pneumonia is a contagious disease, too, and it may be contracted from another person who has it. For this reason it is best to avoid a pneumonia patient. The sufferer should be isolated and every precaution taken to prevent the spread of the disease.

Since pneumonia is a serious disease, requiring the utmost care and nursing, it is best whenever possible to send the patient to a good hospital. Here all the necessary precautions can be taken and all facilities that will hasten convalescence are available.

No one will deny that the prevention of pneumonia is much easier than its cure. To this end, avoid dust, dirt and smoke if you can. Keep the house well ventilated and comfortably warm. Avoid overheated rooms and drafts.

Never neglect a cold. Dress according to the weather. So far as possible avoid contact with all contagious diseases. Obtain enough hours of rest, avoid fatigue and exposure to cold and dampness. Make sure that your diet is simple and nutritious.

If you have a cold do not neglect it. I cannot speak too strongly about the hazards of the common cold. Persistent cough, headache, fever and a general feeling of illness are signs of impending danger. Go to bed and call your physician. In this way you may prevent a great deal of unnecessary suffering and perhaps ward off an attack of pneumonia.

Globe-Trotting

By LOUIS L. KAUFMAN

Hello, ladies and gentlemen:

Carnegie residents aren't the only ones to be favored with a miniature Christmas display. At Corwin Miller's, 821 Lemington avenue, there is an entire village constructed to scale out of cardboard.

* * *

Tony Sasparella produces an original title by addressing a letter to the "Globe Runner." Tony enjoyed the "wildcat" better than anything else on the program because he, the "wildcat," made so much noise that he, Tony, couldn't hear his wife. I hope your wife sees this, Tony. (Just a pal).

* * *

Once more, the last opportunity I will have before Christmas, I want to tell all those good people who have written in for toys and baskets that their letters were taken care of the best way I know how. There was such a flood of letters that it doesn't seem possible that all will have their requests heeded. You will understand, won't you?—and not just think that your pleas fell on deaf ears.

* * *

Christmas is the happy time for me. It is more than a holiday—it's my anniversary as Globe Trotter. And when this season rolls around I feel the passing of another year and can only hope that during its flight new friends have been made and older friendships more firmly cemented and then pray that the next Christmas will mean still more friends.

Christmas Ghost Story On Air

Pittsburgh, Wheeling and Fairmont radio listeners tonight hear the eerie story of a ghost appearing on board a vessel at sea on Christmas Eve.

"The Christmas Eve Ghost," adapted from a story in tomorrow's American Weekly, big feature magazine distributed with the Sunday Sun-Telegraph, and built around the simple faith of New England sailormen, pictures a small vessel at sea, and the crew's watchful waiting for the promised return of the spirit of one of their shipmates the night before Christmas.

It is heard over WWVA, Wheeling, at 5:45 p. m.; WMMN, Fairmont, at 7, and WCAE at 7:45.

Local Highlights on WJAS Tonight

Paul Gannon sings a special Christmas program during his 6:45 "Songs at Eventide."

Radio Makes Progress In 1933

By AIRCASTER

It would just be defying tradition to face the new year without first having accomplished a sort of last roundup on the significant events of the old year.

It is on these items alone that the radio listener who cares can base its expectations for 1934.

So I have attempted to select them carefully, with an eye peeled for trends and improvement.

* * *

SYMPHONY NO. 1

Most noteworthy, so far as entertainment structure is concerned, I believe, was the somewhat courageous swing from the monotony of popular music to the classics and semi-classics with the resultant surprising popularization of symphonic programs both in full and in miniature.

The commercial adoption of the Metropolitan Opera served to confirm a mass movement toward higher class musical works.

"Third in importance was the peculiar treatment of the glee-club technique by popular orchestras.

And fourth, the consistent progress of the variety shows originally conceived by Rudy Vallee.

* * *

NEGATIVES

The negative developments concerned comedy, which showed every indication of being definitely on the wane, with few exceptions, and the drama, which has continued to survive, though it is sorely afflicted with pernicious anemia.

It is comforting, however, to know that although nothing significant was done in the dramatic field, the broadcasting executives have diagnosed most of the ills, and will concentrate on remedying them in 1934.

* * *

SPECIAL EVENTS

The most interesting occurrences during 1933 were, of course, the special events broadcasts.

Of primary significance, of course, were President Roosevelt's fireside talks, by which, as the economists will tell you, the morale of the nation was conserved to a large degree.

Other memorable broadcasts include the eye-witness account of the attempt on Mr. Roosevelt's life in Miami, February 15; the first broadcast to the American people by Hitler, March 2; the Roosevelt inaugural, March 4; Russia's first broadcast to America, March 25; the World Fair opening, May 27; the first dramatic broadcast from a vessel at sea, July 1; the premiere broadcast by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., August 26; the mobilization for the needy program, combining all networks, November 5; the repeal proclamation, December 6, and the first broadcast from India, December 13.

* * *

SONG HITS

For the first time in several years, the task of picking the half dozen song hits of a season is not difficult. Unquestionably they are as follows: (1) "The Last Roundup;" (2) "Lazybones;" (3) "Stormy Weather;" (4) "Did You Ever See a Dream Walking?" (5) "Who's Afraid of the Big Bad Wolf?" and (6) "Annie Doesn't Live Here Any More."

Teddy Joyce, conducting Marty Gregor's orchestra at the Gay Paree over the holidays, and heard on the air at midnight every night over KDKA, trapses off to London at the end of his Pittsburgh engagement. Terry Goff, New Brighton tenor, goes with him.

JAMES J. LONG'S SPORTS COMMENT

Mack Names "Greatest." Cobb and Matty First. Suhr in Charity Game. | Fame for Beaver Falls. Grid Referee's Travels. Gamble for Ring Chance.

From the background of more than a half century in baseball, Connie Mack, 71 today, picks some "greatest" players and teams. In Mack's opinion, the greatest ball player was Ty Cobb; the greatest pitcher was Christy Mathewson; the greatest manager up to 1902 was Ned Hanlon, of the Baltimore Orioles, and after that year the greatest was John McGraw, of the New York Giants; the greatest teams were the Orioles of 1894-95-96, the Cubs from 1906 to 1909, and the A's from 1910 to 1914.

Connie Mack

Giving his reasons for the selections, Mack said Cobb stood out above all other players and excelled in every department of the game. Mathewson was the ideal pitcher. He had everything and did everything right. Where most pitchers lack one or two qualities, Matty had them all. Hanlon lived and talked baseball from morning to night, and developed McGraw and a host of other stars. Mack recalled having played under Hanlon, and while he didn't mention the place, it was Pittsburgh in 1891, when Hanlon, with the Players' League disbanded, managed the local National League club for four months.

Modestly refraining from touching on his own record, Mack said that after 1902 McGraw stood out. Connie ranked the former Giant skipper as a great teacher and leader and declared the game lost a lot when McGraw dropped out.

SUHR PLAYS IN CHARITY GAME ON COAST

I. J. Mittelberger, of 6400 Bartlett street, sends in a copy of The Elks Magazine containing a description of a charity baseball game played in San Francisco, in which Gus Suhr, Pirate first baseman, appeared in a lineup of major league stars residing on the Coast, against a team made up of Pacific Coast Leaguers. The game netted $6,000, with which San Francisco Lodge, No. 3, of the Elks, will purchase Christmas baskets for the needy of that city and vicinity.

Suhr and his major league mates took a trimming from the Coast Leaguers, 5 to 3. The lineup from the big show included Joe Cronin, Lefty O'Doul, Dick Bartell, Lefty Gomez, Tony Lazzeri, Chick Hafey, Ernest Lombardi, Roy Johnson, Gordon Slade and Willie Kamm. Ty Cobb managed the Major Leaguers and Jimmy Caveney piloted the opposition. The Big Leaguers made all of their runs in the fifth inning, when O'Doul tripled with two on and Bartell followed with a double. Friends presented a gold watch to Cronin and a chest of silver to O'Doul.

FAME OF BEAVER FALLS BOYS COINCIDENCE

While setting a record in having four of its former students on the playing lists for the coming Rose Bowl game, Kiski is not the only Western Pennsylvania institution to gain unusual football distinction through the achievements of its graduates this year. Beaver Falls High School, too, gets a place in the spotlight, by reason of the honors won by two of its products, whose rise to national gridiron fame reveals a striking coincidence. The players are Frank Walton, Pitt's star tackle, and Horse Hendrickson, quarterback of Duke University. Howard Townsend writes from Beaver Falls to call attention to their strangely parallel careers.

Frank Walton

Walton and Hendrickson played together on the Beaver Falls High School team for two years, and are finishing college at the same time. Both were outstanding stars on their elevens this year, and to complete the parallel both were named on the All-America Board's Roll of Honor as exceptional players at their respective positions. And in the same school connection, an earlier chapter in the story shows that another former Beaver Falls High boy, Chuck Howe, became a star center at Princeton, was elected captain of the Tigers in 1928, and, like Walton and Hendrickson, was given a ranking of honor by the All-America Board. Not so bad for one town and one high school.

FOOTBALL REFEREE COVERS MUCH GROUND

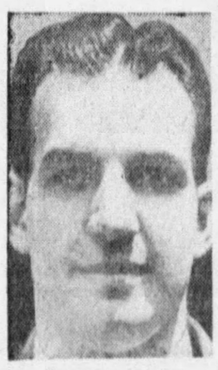
Have you ever tried to estimate how much ground a referee covers during his mad dashes up and down the field during a football game? Two miles, you say? Or even three? You'll be surprised at the correct answer, but during the game between Southern California and Washington out on the Coast Braven Dyer and others took pains to get the exact distance and they found that from the start to the finish of the contest, Referee Jim Blewett traveled not an inch less than six and three-quarter miles.

Few ball carriers make more than 100 yards per game, but the referee has to run every time the ball is packed, and then run back again for the next play.

How do they know Blewett made all that yardage? Simply by the use of what is known as a hikemeter. The gadget, which resembles a small watch, was carried by the referee and registered every step he took during the game. When his afternoon of galloping had been completed, the hikemeter showed six and three-quarters miles. Maybe the officials are not overpaid after all.

NEUSEL NO PART OF BOYCOTT ON GARDEN

The managers of some of the country's leading boxers often sacrifice profitable matches rather than permit their fighters to perform at Madison Square Garden in New York. They're either sore at the matchmaker or have a grievance against some other figure in the Garden Corporation on account of unsatisfactory dealings in the past. There are so many of these objectors that the movement amounts almost to a boycott.



Ray Impellittiere

But Walter Neusel, the German heavyweight now operating in this country, is no part of it. While some other managers go to extreme lengths to keep their charges out of the Garden, Neusel and his German manager, Paul Damski, are willing to go to extremes to get into it. They have an idea that once a fighter works there, all other promoters engage in a stampede to use him.

Anyhow, Damski is giving Ray Impellittiere a guarantee of $5,000, with the privilege of 37½ per cent, for the 10-round bout in which the Imp will meet Neusel at the Garden next Friday night. The last Garden show featuring heavyweights drew less than the amount Damski is guaranteeing Impellittiere as his bit, so you can see the long chance the German is taking for the sake of appearing at New York's big club. As for the Garden management, it isn't worrying. It has put the fight down for 50 per cent, and if any part of that is left after Impellittiere gets his $5,000, Neusel can have it. The Germans may have to dig.

MIAMI SUFFERS LOSS OF STAR QUARTERBACK

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 23.—Coach Tommy McCann ordered full speed ahead for his University of Miami footballers today as the Hurricanes went back to work after a week's layoff.

Term examinations caused the boys to foresake the gridiron for class rooms, but there will be plenty of hard work from now until Miami takes the field against Elmer Layden's Dukes on New Year's Day in the Festival of the Palms game.

ZUPPKE ON HAND

Good and bad news was received in the camp at the same time yesterday. The good report was that Robert C. Zuppke, famous Illinois coach under whom McCann played, was to arrive today to help his former pupil prepare to stop the high-powered Duquesne offense. Zup wired for the Hurricanes to be in uniform at 9:30 this morning for a stiff session.

The crafty Dutchman came down last winter and the first thing he gave Miami was one of his pet scoring plays. It was used for the Hurricane touchdown that beat Manhattan in the first Palms Festival contest.

QUARTERBACK LOST

The bad news came with the announcement that Tommy Thompson, clever little quarterback, had received a broken arm in an automobile accident early in the morning. Thompson, an expert forward passer and the best field general on the squad, was being counted upon to do plenty of throwing in the New Year's Day game.

SOCCER RIVALS CLASH TODAY

By TOM BIRKS

The leadership of the Central District Soccer League is at stake this afternoon as the Arsenal and Old Carnegie aggregations clash at the Butler street grounds. Arsenal has dropped one point in eight games, while the Carnegie outfit has a clean record in seven games. It is likely that the winner of today's tussle will carry off the title.

The other game in the circuit finds the Dunwick Rovers hooking up with Clan Douglas at the Westinghouse High School field.

Tomorrow the big game of the day finds Curry and the Castle Shannon Riehls battling in the first round of the Western Pennsylvania Senior Cup competition. Johnny Jaap and Buff Donnelli are scheduled to lock horns.

BROWNS SIGN WEAVER

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 23. — (AP.) — Jim Weaver, pitcher who won 25 games for Newark of the International League last season, signed a contract with the St. Louis American League club yesterday.

EXPLANATION OF RIPLEY'S CARTOON OF YESTERDAY: A CANINE MENDICANT—"General," the "begging" dog, solicits coins from the patrons of the cafe and either catches them expertly in his mouth when properly tossed or picks them off the floor. He is intelligent enough to refuse slugs, such as are used in slot machines, and until lately would not touch anything less than a nickel. The "collection" then is carried to the lunch counter, where he exchanges his hoard for a helping of sausage or meat.

TIRED PLAYERS GLAD TO END LONG TRIP

By BILL CORUM
International News Service.

TUCSON, Ariz., Dec. 23.—It is unusual for this writer to sit in his shirt sleeves in the courtyard of an ancient hacienda and wish his friends a Merry Christmas. But it seems to be an old Spanish custom. So from Tucson to the tenderloin and the hot-dog pitches and flea circuses of old Broadway, to the Loop in Chicago, the Gold Coast, to California, and to wherever else these sometimes light lines are sometimes read, a happy holiday and a happy hunting in 1934.

Also to his fellow workers and all the members of a great craft, the newspaper boys, and to all lovers of sport, and to the youngsters who will be the athletic heroes and the successful Americans of tomorrow, even to Tiny Thornhill and them Stanfords, your Columbia correspondent extends greetings of the season.

And most especially to a great man in a great job, the smiling gentleman of Washington, who is making it possible for this rich, happy and prosperous land to smile again, the same many times over.

TEAM IN SHAPE

Although the Columbia team arrived in Tucson in good shape and spirits, after a wonderful trip on which it saw nothing save sunny skies, it will appreciate the week's layover and rest in this hospitable Arizona city. The players were beginning to get a bit fagged and travel-worn.

After all, it is no cinch for a youngster to ride 2,000 miles through strange country, attend an alumni luncheon a day, practice football on an alien field, meet and greet a host of strange faces and inquiring reporters and photographers, and keep himself in white might be called fighting trim.

It was difficult to tell many times during the trip whether these boys were football players or moving picture stars, so much attention did they receive in each city where they stopped. But all that is behind them now, and Little believes they will get their land legs back after a couple of days here.

RECEPTION CUT SHORT

Perhaps it was just as well that yesterday's reception in El Paso was somewhat curtailed due to a smallpox epidemic across the Rio Grande in Juarez. The Mexicans are engaged in their Christmas fiesta during this season and the original plan was to take the entire party on a Chinatown tour of the city. This had to be either called off or the boys had to submit to vaccination, and someh. they didn't relish the idea of playing Stanford with sore arms.

After sampling a couple of lightning bolt shots of that tequilla, we also decided to cross the bridge and match ourselves with a bull last evening, smallpox or no smallpox. But those Mexican bulls either have no courage, or have learned to stay away from gentlemen who have been sampling tequilla. I couldn't get t match

St. Louis Bookies To Change Tactics

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 23. — (AP.) — Three hundred St. Louis handbook makers have decided to cease paying off racing bets at track odds, and put a maximum of 20 to 1, 8 to 1 and 4 to 1 on all win, place and show bets.

The bookies are reported to have suffered reavy losses in recent weeks. Several prominent old-line bookies will continue to operate on basis of track odds.

Canadiens Test Hockey Helmets

MONTREAL, Dec. 23.—(AP.)—Light fibre helmets, designed to protect hockey players from head injuries such as that suffered by Irvin (Ace) Bailey, of the Toronto Maple Leafs, yesterday were tried out by the Canadiens in practice and pronounced satisfactory. They will be used in the National League game with Detroit tonight.

ALL-AMERICA TEAM ELECTS CORBUS CAPTAIN

SKLADANY TIES FOR SECOND IN VOTING

By CHRISTY WALSH,
Member, All-America Board of Football. (Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.)

After reposing for the past 12 months in the athletic achieves at Notre Dame, the All-America Captain's Cup is moving westward en route to Palo Alto, Cal., where it becomes the temporary property of Bill Corbus and the Athletic Association at Leland Stanford University.

Bill Corbus

Corbus received four votes, Skladany, Pittsburgh, and Warburton, Southern California, obtained two votes each, and three other players received one vote apiece. A year ago Joe Kurth, Notre Dame's All-America tackle, was chosen captain—that being the first election of its kind in the history of football. Handsomely designed in silver and standing 26 inches high, the Captain's Cup carries the official seal of the All-America Board, the name of the captain elected each year and his university, and the name of the donor—Mrs. Knute K. Rockne.

BOND OF INTEREST

Immediately after the 1933 team was selected recently, ballots for the captaincy were in the hands of the following players: Skladany, Pittsburgh; Smith, Washington; Feather, Tennessee; Purvis, Purdue; Sauer, Nebraska; Ceppi, Princeton; Corbus, Stanford; Wistert and Bernard, Michigan; Warburton and Rosenberg, Southern California.

The cup award was approved by the All-America board last season as a means of establishing a visible bond of interest among the scattered members of the team—something that had been lacking in all previous years. The idea has been warmly welcomed by coaches and authorities, and particularly by All-America players.

At the end of next football season, another captain will be elected and the cup will move on to another university—but after three names have been engraved on the award, it will become the permanent and personal property of either Kurth, Corbus or the captain to be elected next at the end of 1934. The players on the All-America teams for 1932, '33 and '34 will be permitted to decide which of their three captain's has best exemplified the ideals and responsibilities of an All-America player, in civil life. Following this, a new cup will be provided for another period of three football seasons, and the annual award will be continued exactly as before.

NATURAL LEADER

Bill Corbus, a senior and a guard, has been the mainstay of the Stanford line for the past three seasons and acting captain in many important games. He has consistently exemplified the qualifications of a natural leader—particularly in the face of adverse conditions—and his playing, inspiration and kicking in Stanford's two most important games turned apparent defeat into victory and a tie for the Conference championship.

Corbus is an honor student, a leader of the student body and his independence as a thinker was evidenced a year ago when he openly advocated that football players and all varsity athletes should receive some compensation for their services. Refusing to pussy-foot on this much-mooted and troublesome subject, Corbus declared himself in no uncertain terms, evoking much favorable comment in the college world—and some criticism.

TO PLAY IN ROSE BOWL

In voting for an All-America captain, the following factors are considered, as recommended by the board: (1), leadership; (2), intellectual qualities; (3), sportsmanship; (4), sacrifice; (5), loyalty to team; (6), influence on teammates, morally and physically; (7), candidate's season record on offense and (8), record on defense.

Corbus, the only 1932 All-American to repeat in '33, will be the first All-America captain to play in the Rose Bowl, and this distinction should attract special interest to his performance against Columbia on New Years Day.

Bailey Reported Out of Danger

BOSTON, Dec. 23.—(INS.)—Out of danger and definitely on the mend, Irvin (Ace) Bailey, Toronto hockey player who suffered a fractured skull on December 12, today looked forward to a jolly Christmas celebration with his family in City Hospital.

The Maple Leafs utility forward, whose amazing vitality twice pulled him from the brink of death as the medical world stood by helplessly, spent another night of normal sleep, his third since passing the crisis. He has been removed from a restricted diet, although on official records he still is on the danger list.

Bailey, injured in a collision with Eddie Shore, Boston Bruins defense man, was expected to recover completely.

MacDougal, Birch Lost to Duquesne

The Duquesne University basketball team will be forced to play without the services of Jim MacDougal, star forward, who has been forced out of action with an infected ear.

The illness of MacDougal marks the second Duquesne regular forced out of the lineup. Paul Birch, star forward, is recuperating from a tonsil operation.

The Dukes meet Adrian College, of Adrian, Mich., on the Bluff court Wednesday night.

THE LATE TOD SLOAN

TOD SLOAN AS A BOOKIE . . . AFTER HIS JOCKEY DAYS

(This is the second article of a series of five on the glamorous career of Tod Sloan, who died in California Thursday. He was the greatest jockey of his time and the toast of two continents. He made a huge fortune and died broke. Hype Igoe, the author, is one of the veteran sports writers of America and was a friend of Sloan from the latter's earliest days in the sports limelight.)

By HYPE IGOE
International News Service.

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—Tod Sloan's father was mortally afraid of horses!

He turned pale at the sight of a cat, and a dog was about as welcome as a Bengal Tiger. It is strange then that Tod's love for animals, especially race horses, became akin to passion. He never "bled" a horse in his life for the simple reason that he refused to wear spurs and only carried a "bat" as a warning to horses. He once told Pittsburgh Phil:

"I know that some horses are mean. Some are sour-tempered and some are plain loco through pure cussedness and blood lines. The same goes for human beings. You must treat them much the same as you would horses and vice versa."

Only one horse ever dominated Tod Sloan. Diamond Jubilee, owned by the Prince of Wales, afterward King of England, and entered in the English Derby, conquered the master horseman.

It is of record that the most treacherous of stallions, usually the "bad actors," wilted and became lead ponies under Sloane's soft patting, his crooning voice. That is why he eschewed the use of spurs and the whip.

COULD TAME 'EM

In England Sloane's gentleness and soothing command over a "bad actor" got its test almost at the start. Tod told me the story himself a few years ago as we sat in the Doyle Billiard Academy. Tod, Doyle and John McGraw owned the poolroom. He said:

"When I walked into the stall I found the English grooms all of a flutter over the behavior of the horse I was to ride. Four of them had him by the head, hauling and pulling on dog chains which they fastened to the halter. A cruel twitch and the animal's upper lip twisted until it resembled a cruller.

"The horse was dripping with perspiration and no man dared approach close enough to place the saddle blanket over him. I watched them for a while and then I asked that the switch be removed from the animal's lip. They stood aghast.

"I said:

"'Take off those chains. Let him stand by himself. Give him a chance. You've got the horse ready for a straight-jacket instead of a saddle. Please let me handle him for a while'."

ENCOUNTERS MASTER

Tod allowed the horse to settle down to normalcy before he began his petting and crooning. Carefully he found the runners velvet nose and presently Sloan was in under the horse's neck and patting its chest and withers.

Then, Tod continued:

"I soon found this horse the most amiable of creatures. Once the poor beast reached down and kissed my cheek, it seemed, as if welcoming a new-found friend. I rode him to victory and always went out of my way to call on him and renew our friendship whenever he was in one of the stalls."

Diamond Jubileee was a rogue if ever there was one. Prince Edward admired the horse because of its ancestry and unquestioned running ability. Sloan's fame as a handler of demon horses spread among English owners. Diamond Jubilee's temper had accounted for the death of one jockey and the horrible mangling of another.

At Prince Edward's suggestion, Sloan was sought as a rider. Diamond Jubilee's pet trick was to unseat its rider by suddenly turning and nipping the jockey's boot. Once those powerful front teeth gripped the toe or foot of the jockey it became a matter of life and death. The powerful stallion would perk the boy out of the saddle by the leg, drop him down in front of its feet and trample on the lad.

HAS MOUNT ON 'KILLER'

Sloan agreed to ride the killer in the Derby. Came the day of the race. A crowd actually gathered around the stall awaiting developments, since there were many of the poor-pooh brigade on hand to declare that the tiny "monkey seat" man was no more capable of handling the beast than their own top riders.

Sloan stood at the horse's head trying to make friends. For once in his career he had met a horse which absolutely refused to chum up. The Prince chatted with Sloan and offered friendly tips. The horse remained far more quiet than had been its habit. The animal seemed to be giving Sloan the once-over. Quietly it submitted to Tod's 100 pounds of weight when the mounting bugle pierced the air.

There was no rearing of hauling at the halter rope. The trainer breathed naturally for the first time in hours as Diamond Jubilee walked peacefully toward the paddock gate. Sloan gingerly adjusted his stirrup irons, knotting the reins, and flashed his "bat" so that the killer would at least know that he had it on board.

BATTLE OF WITS

Then trouble began to loom. Diamond Jubilee wasn't all kitten—not yet. The shapely head began to turn, first this way and that. Sloan had been warned about that boot-grabbing habit.

Tod was as alert as an Indian. The blighter wouldn't get a toehold on James Todhunter Sloan if that mite of a man could help it and he meant to help it. Every time the horse looked around, sneakingly, indeed, Sloan would elevate his boot foot so that it would be impossible for the animal to grasp it in its teeth. A strange game of tag began as the parade of horses neared the entrance to the track.

They were within 10 feet of the fence when Diamond Jubilee struck. Quicker than lightning the horse's head came around and the tip of Sloan's boot was caught between its steely teeth. With an unearthly roar the horse began to whirl in an effort of unseat the tiny genius perched on its back. It became a thrilling struggle for mastery, although Sloan knew that the furious stallion held the winning hand.

SUBSTITUTE WINS DERBY

In one of its mad pirouettes the squealing stallion came close to the fence. Sloan didn't hesitate. There was one chance to break the beast's grip on his boot toe and save his own life. He took it. Sloan fairly dived out of the saddle and spreading out his arms, sailed head-first over the fence, leaving his riding boot dangling from the stallion's vise-like teeth.

No amount of coaxing would induce Sloan to mount the horse a second time. Prince Edward was furious when he was told that Sloan refused to ride his entry. The race was held up and a new pilot sought. The trainer, knowing the savage better than anyone else, decided that Herbie Jones, a lowly stable boy would have a fairer chance with the horse and its didoes than a stranger.

Jones was put into the saddle and the Prince's colors were lifted up. How the boy got the maneater off in front and came on to win the coveted Derby is English turf history.

MACK, 71, PLANS TO CONTINUE IN GAME

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 23.—(AP.)—Finis to the fulsome baseball saga of Connie Mack—its first chapter inscribed half a century ago, its latest just drying on the pages—will be written only when the diamond dean can no longer carry on.

As he celebrated his seventy-first birthday today, looking forword enthusiastically to the job of rebuilding he faces on his Athletics as a result of scattering his once-championship stars, he said:

"I'll never retire so long as I retain my health; I'm going to remain active. I'll continue managing as long as I feel I can help my players.

"When my players can't get any more help from me; when I give them the wrong answers, and when my mentality is questioned—then I'll realize the time has come to say goodbye to the dug-out."

As part of his birthday celebration, Mack plans to go for his first airplane ride today, his wife and daughter accompanying him.

BRAVES WANT HAFEY

BOSTON, Dec. 23.—(AP.)—Twenty thousand dollars, just a few pennies to the Boston Red Sox but a whale of a lot of money to the Braves, is the stumbling block in the deal that would send Charles (Chick) Hafey, Cincinnati's bespectacled slugging outfielder to the local National League Club.

Emil Fuchs, Braves' president, yesterday broke down and confessed that he was willing, and even eager, to give $50,000 cash and Outfielders Hal Lee and Joe Mowry, who, he claims, stand him $80,000, for Hafey's services. But that is $20,000 under the Reds' asking price.

President Larry MacPhail, of the Reds, has described Lee and Mowry as sound collateral in the purchase of Hafey and his willingness to take these Boston outfielders leads Fuchs to believe that his $130,000 cash-players offer will be accepted sooner or later.

CITY LEAGUE FIVES WIN

By JULIUS LEVIN

Four City Scholastic League basketball teams turned in triumphs yesterday and two met up with defeat as the high school passers continued their pre-season tussling.

The crack South High quintet scored the most notable victory, defeating Nate Lippe's Aliquippa team, 29 to 21, in a well played game. Langley barely nosed out Dormont, 21 to 20; Perry downed its alumni, 31 to 27, and Schenley took the measure of Uniontown, 41 to 27.

Allegheny lost to an alumni combination, 37 to 35, and Fifth Avenue lost to Weirton at Weirton, 22 to 19.

In other outstanding games, Braddock downed Erie Strong Vincent, 34 to 32; the Duquesne freshmen beat Rankin, 37 to 23; Beaver Falls crushed Beaver, 32 to 3; Scottdale upset Norwin, 28 to 27; McKeesport took Mt. Lebanon, 27 to 18; Meadville defeated Swissvale, 29 to 23, and Grove City nosed out Butler, 27 to 26.

Pittsburgh Squash Racquets Association players monopolize the local inter-club sport program this afternoon as luminaries of the City Handball circuit take time out for the holidays. The racqueters, however, with lengthy card still ahead of them are slated to battle full blast in both divisions of the loop.

As the pace-setting P. A. A. crew lies idle, Ben Pope's crack pair of Keystone A. C. entries aim to pick up ground in the Class A title chase. The Keystone No. 2 array, trimmed by the Winged Headers in 4-1 upset on the downtown courts last Saturday, today entertains the Pittsburgh Golf Club team, while the No. 1 contingent fares afield to Sewickley for a contest with Allegheny Country Club.

Both K. A. C. outfits appear likely victors today. Pittsburgh Golf Club, though boasting possession of the district team title, has lost City Champion McCook Reed, who now cavorts for the Keystone No. 1 delegation. The Keystone No. 2 combine, flashing Henry Blaxter, Bill Bickel, Larry Semans, Jean Casper and Del Kennedy, seems a trifle too strong for a golf club rival mustering Jim Ebbert, Joe Oliver, Graham McCargo, George Lockhart and George Flinn, while the Keystone No. 1's, with Reed, Ed Seifert, Charley Fagan, Chip Kennedy and A. W. Schmidt, look to have an edge over Stan Quay, Frank White and the rest of the Alleghenians.

Meanwhile in Class B ranks, Edgeworth seeks to retain first position in spite of prospect of torrid skirmish at the Keystone Club. P. A. A. Seconds, a scant notch to the rear of Edgeworth, should come through handily in invasion of the Pittsburgh Golf Club precinct and stand excellent chance of deadlocking or passing the front-seaters before evening.

NOTED TRAINER INDICTED

International News Service.

DETROIT, Dec. 23.—Joe F. Patterson, of the Audley Farms stable, one of the best known horse trainers in the United States, was indicted here yesterday afternoon with four other horsemen on the charge of conspiring to dope two Audley Farm racers during the fall meeting at the State Fair grounds in this city.

Others who were charged by the Federal Grand Jury with conspiracy to violate the Harrison Anti-Narcotic Act, and also the internal revenue laws by transportation and possession of drugs, were: Robert Winfield, also trainer for Audley Farms; Morton Smith, Thomas Murray and Horace Moore, a Negro horse handler.

It is charged that Patterson gave Smith some drugs to take to Winfield on September 21, and that Moore, Winfield and Murray were in the act of administering drugs to the horse, Knight's Gal, when the federal agents arrested them on October 7.

Winfield, Murray and Moore are at liberty under bonds of $3,000 each and bench warrants were to be asked by the district attorney for Patterson and Smith.

Rose Bowl Dope Break for Lions; They Can't Lose

By HARRY KECK
Sports Editor.

What's all the shooting about in this Columbia vs. Stanford Rose Bowl situation?

From many sides comes the cry that Stanford picked a setup when it chose Columbia as its opponent.

Wait and see. Columbia was a good team throughout the season, and Stanford wasn't any better than good. So how can they figure Columbia is outclassed before it even steps upon the field?

Stanford got a reputation out of beating a Southern California team that wasn't up to its best strength of recent years.

So that's supposed to make Stanford champion of something or other. Which is a break for Columbia. It doesn't have to win to come out of the game with a bundle of credit. Any half decent sort of a showing will be regarded in the light of a triumph.

On the other hand, Stanford has been built up in the public mind—on what?—to the point where it can gain nothing but gate receipts out of the battle. If it wins, it will have been expected; if it is held to a tie, the other team will get the edge in the matter of glory, and, if it loses, it's a bum or a collection of bums.

If the Stanford players read the newspapers that tell them how good they are and how good Columbia isn't, Coach Tiny Thornhill will have the time of his life bringing his team up to the mark. On the other hand, the psychology is just right for Columbia to go in there and mop up the turf.

They can scoff all they want to about Columbia in advance, but the dope is putting the Lions in a swell spot and setting up Stanford to take one on the chin.

Which reminds us that the tip is out that Jim Londos, the wrestling champion, is back with, or is going back to, Jack Curley. Which leads to the question of what will become of Jim Browning, Curley's new champion, in that event?

Gus Camp thinks he has a coming champion in Dominic Mancini, his Italian welterweight. Ray Foutts thinks pretty well of his Marty Gornick. The pair have been matched for the windup at the Moose Monday afternoon and the battle looms as a good Christmas present for the fans.

Cup Jenkins Five Plays I. K. S. Tonight

The Cup Jenkins Club, of Homestead, will be out to chalk up its fifth straight win of the season when it meets the Irene Kaufmann Settlement quintet in a Allegheny County League game on the Homestead High School floor tonight. Jenkins is tied for third place with Charleroi.

Brud Stepens, Joe Vernon and Eddie Losman, formerly of Duquesne University, and Art Hyatt, Zeleznik, Radavansky and Malackney, ex-scholastic stars, make up the Jenkins team.

HARMAN GETS NEW CONTRACT

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 23.—(AP.)—Trustees of the University of Pennsylvania have reaffirmed their confidence in the Gates plan of intercollegiate athletic activity at Penn.

At the same time, the board reappointed Lawson Robertson, Harvey Harman and Russell Callow as coaches of track, football and crew respectively, for three-year periods.

The board voted confidence in and adherence to the Gates plan after receiving the report of Dr. E. Leroy Mercer, dean of the department of physical education, on the progress and operation of the policy.

The report recognized that the plan "has been criticised in certain quarters," but held that this has occurred "because it has not been understood."

Spring football practice, barred by the Gates plan, will be held in a modified form next spring as it was this year, the report said.

STANFORD LEAVES TONIGHT

PALO ALTO, Cal., Dec. 23.—(AP.)—After more than a week of quarterly examinations, Stanford's football players yesterday renewed practice for their Rose Bowl game with Columbia at Pasadena, New Years Day.

For the first regular workout after a considerable layoff, Coach Tiny Thornhill sent his charges through signal drills. A bit of blocking practice was added to the routine. The session was for two hours. The squad will leave for Pasadena tonight.

The right end position, held down by Al Norgard until he was declared ineligible two days ago, was filled by Lyle Smith, 173-pound Bakersfield boy. Smith was Norgard's first substitute during the season, and saw service in several games.

A list of pallbearers is being selected from his scores of friends of the turf by Mrs. Betty Sloan, former actress, who divorced him in 1926.

Dots and Dashes

If Leland Hayward's nails are chewed down as far as his elbows by now, it is from wondering—and worrying—about what Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar will say about him in their next nationally circulated magazine story. Gould used to be a Hayward slient, by the way . . . Many of us have wondered what became of Frank Fay's moving picture which he made and produced . . . When his charming wife, Barbara Stanwyck, was tiffing with the Warners—Fay decided to show them how movies should be made . . . Well, this is what happened to it . . . When Barbara reconciled with that studio—it took the epic off his hands and gave him $70,000 for it, and so he lost only $30,000 . . . it was christened, ironically enough, "A Fool's Advice" . . . I know I shouldn't be that fussy . . . But I do these things to irritate people who irritate me . . . Kay Francis, I mean . . . The papers related that her movie firm officially announced the parting of Miss Francis and her husband, Kenneth McKenna—an amicable parting, it appears . . . They will be pals . . . When I was covering the Hollywood front last summer—I reported the impending split . . . Miss Francis made a to-do about it before several guests at the home of the Sam Goldwyns—and I regretted being such a poor reporter . . . In fact, the friends of Miss Francis on the other papers on the coast quoted her about "those dreadful gossips"—as did the movie mags.

Add forms of criticism: "He's the kind of a guy who saves street car transfers". . .Damon Runyon is plotting to do a thesis on Eddie Cantor, who hates publicity—like Polly hates crackers, as Arthur Baer would flip. . .The epic flight of the Lindberghs will result in a tremendous advertising campaign for the engine which they used . . . Never have I bothered with denying an item from the pens of my colleagues, when the people concerned urged me to do so. . .Because I often blunder, too, and if all of us who go in for "scoops" were to knock down the other fellow's stuff, it would be too easy to fill a column. . . But this time I have sane reason to deny a recent big beat. . .Two correspondents reported that Lee Tracy and Isabel Jewel were secretly married last Sunday. . . That night via the skies I gave Lee Tracy a scolding for not letting me have the news first, considering that I've been shedding tears in his behalf since he was Mexicanned. . .The following telegram just arrived from Lee. . ."Tain't true, Walter, if it happens you'll be the best man standing by me. Isabel agrees."

Add things that floor me. . . The producer of the shorts starring Jackie Coogan in his comeback, now explains that his backers walked out on him—and the first of these pictures, completed, is on a shelf. . . Neither Master Coogan nor any of the cast have received their wages, and Coogan has returned to his school—disappointed. . . But I. A. Allen, the producer, was the gentleman who gave Clara Kimball Young a job in the flicker—and she, too, drew no pay. . .I can't work up a temper about Mr. Allen—for he was sincere enough—he did give Miss Young a job when no other producer would. . .And her luck ran out on her, again. . .Short story: The Chicago Herald-Examiner's December 16 issue, under "Barter and Exchange" included this advertisement, to wit: "A $25 racing system for anything of value. P. O. Box 51, Cicero, Ill."

My confrere (whatever that means) Nick Kenny recently reported that Ben Bernie (whoever he is) had just taken out a half-million dollars in insurance. . . . So J. M. Josefsberg, the clown, adds that the insurance company certainly has nothing to worry about as only the good die young. . . And Len Golos, a keen onlooker, was just in to tell me that he caught Bernie's "act" at the Paramount and that Ben's biggest howls come from gags about me. . . Golos observed: "In other words, you're still the hit of his show" . . . Tee, hee and a huff and a puff.

Here's a story about the late Larry Fay which might interest you. It shows that whatever his faults, he had one thing, loyalty, to the Nth degree . . . In the good old days before '29, stocks, you know, had vogues, like fashions, and one year taxicab companies were favorites . . . One of the leading brokers on the curb exchange looked around for a promising cab company to promote, and he struck upon Fay's concern, then very active. . . . He called on Fay, made him a proposition of $400,000, and a slice of the stock to float the company's shares on the market, and the deal was closed . . . The stock did well on the exchange, but one day an official of the curb summoned the broker and informed him that the identity of some of the directors on the Fay firm made it impossible for the curb to continue the issue. . . . The broker sought out Fay and told him the objectionable directors would have to be dropped. Fay told him to go to the devil . . . Then the broker offered to give Fay $800,000 and a larger share of the stock if he would take his friends off the directorate, and Fay again refused. . . . The stock was dropped and nobody made any money. . . . Fay, you may recall, died with 30 cents to his name.

Jingle Restored And Not Just That Of Sleigh Bells

By ARTHUR (BUGS) BAER

Well, the government finally has this moeny thing down right.

It's going to coin plenty of silver in habit-forming quantities.

Dimes, quarters and halves. And let the small business man run it up with the dice.

Give the boys something that will jingle in their pockets. And we don't mean sleigh bells.

There are 506,732,000 silver dollars in circulation now. If that's chicken feed we will learn to cackle.

There ain't enough gold around to plate a thumbnail in a thimble. But give us a hatful of dimes and we will tip it to nobody.

Brown Funny In Warner

By HI HOWARD

We hail "Son of a Sailor," new Joe E. Brown opus now playing in the Warner, as the best Joe E. Brown comedy yet. The plot isn't a burden to the show, but it does stick Brown's funniness together very well. There are some luscious girls. There are some patriotically beautiful pictures of the American navy in action There are complications, and there are some clever, unforced gags. Altogether, it's a grand Christmas week entertainment.

Joe never quits talking, and never quits being funny. We thought we had seen his "ocean mouth" inside and out, but Joe proves us wrong again. There is one scene where he puts an English butler to sleep by engulfing a mouth organ which had us hanging onto our vest buttons.

The authors of "Son of a Sailor" have written a definite line of action into the show, and Joe demonstrates that he can be funny almost all of the time of he has something with which to work. Some of his jokes and many of his situations are old stuff, yes, but Joe adds his own twist.

How Joe saves the Navy's plans for a new robot plane cooks up some genuine thrills. Falling from an airplane, Mr. Brown lands aboard an abandoned battleship, which Navy planes bomb while he is hiding in a garbage can. But that tough guy survives it all, and we are glad of it. Jean Muir, Frank McHugh and Thelma Todd play well, too.

There also is an animated cartoon and a musical short.

Nation rejoices over prohibition's end.

Star Still Has Doll That Santa Faked

One Christmas eve in a Texas town a widowed mother was unable to buy a gift for Santa Claus to pull from his bag at the church entertainment and present to her young daughter. So she took a year-before-last's doll, made a new dress for it, wrapped it up, and thus saved the little girl bitter disappointment.

Mary Brian still has the doll.

Fulton to Open New Bill Christmas Day

The Christmas week attraction in the Fulton Theater will open Christmas day, the feature being a comedy starring Will Rogers, "Mr. Skitch." The humorist will be seen as an automobile tourist in the Far West, supported by a cast including Zasu Pitts and Harry Green. "Smoky," current in the Fulton, will close tonight.

Marion Davies Triumphs in Musical

By MICHAEL SHAW

The screen's musical play cycle reaches a glorious climax in Marion Davies' "Going Hollywood," now on view at the Penn. It is one more tremendous hit for Miss Davies, a triumph for her all-star supporting cast headed by Bing Crosby, and a credit to Director Raoul Walsh.

"Going Hollywood" has just about everything; first and foremost, a sterling characterization by Miss Davies; then an impressive musical score, a succession of humorous situations and witty dialogue from the deft pen of Donald Ogden Stewart, and finally a series of spectacular numbers, dwarfing those of previous screen spectacles, tumbling one after the other with bewildering speed and breath-taking opulence.

The story is briefly that of a young teacher in a fashionable school for girls who falls in love with a crooner after hearing his voice on the radio and follows him to Hollywood. There she gets into the movies, battles a temperamental French star for the crooner's love, brings about his regeneration and finds, in a gorgeous and moving scene, the happy ending.

Miss Davies, as ever, is charming and effective. Her role not only gives ample scope for her acting ability, but allows her to dance and sing and to do one of her most amusing impersonations—this time of Fifi D'Orsay, the villainess of the piece. Bing Crosby sings the many hit songs beautifully; and Miss D'Orsay, Stuart Erwin, Ned Sparks, Patsy Kelly, Sterling Holloway and the Radio Rogues contribute enjoyable bits. A clever farm scene and a magnificent finale, in which a huge orchestra rises, tier upon tier, behind Miss Davies and the ensemble, are features not surpassed by Hollywood and not soon to be forgotten.

The Penn's holiday program includes, appropriately enough, a new Walt Disney Silly Symphony, "The Night Before Christmas," based on the classic poem, and done with fine imagination. The Hearst Metrotone Newsreel, a review of the biggest events of the dying year, is particularly interesting. There is also an Our Gang comedy.

Gene Remains Bachelor

By HARRISON CARROLL

HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 23.—They've had Gene Raymond smitten with several beauties in the last few months, but the blond star is leaving Hollywood a bachelor and will take his mother on a vacation trip to Europe.

Showing that Gene has done all right with the fair sex, however, he had Janet Gaynor, Mary Brian and Marian Nixon down to see him off on the train.

It was Marian Nixon whom the gossips all thought that Gene was getting serious about of late.

All of that will have to be forgotten for some time. The actor plans to spend Christmas with his family in New York, and then he and his mother, Mrs. Mary Kipling, will sail for a tour of England and the Continent.

They won't come back until Gene is called to make his next picture at Columbia.

* * *

James Cagney is a wise guy on the screen, but a swindler just took him by an age-old trick—and if it hadn't been for Mrs. Cagney the loss would have been greater.

Several days ago, the carrot-topped star received a telegram at the studios reading:

"Seriously hurt auto accident. Wire $500. Leonard."

The wire came from Chicago. Jimmy thought his brother, Leonard, was in New York but, the Cagneys being a very loyal family, he called his wife and told her to send the money.

Later on, when he returned home, they checked and found that Brother Leonard was in New York, and hadn't been injured.

Then Mrs. Cagney revealed that she had been suspicious and had only wired $100.

In Hollywood is a man who mourns the passing of prohibition as loudly as the dryest dry. He is Harry Frink, who has grossed $263,000 in the past 11 years renting liquor bottles to the various motion picture studios. Frink's collection numbers hundreds of bottles and represents an investment of $8,000. Renting the bottles at $1 a day, he earned a profit that was quick and easy. Now Frink fears that "No More Women," in the Paramount studios, will be one of the last pictures he services.

Big Burlesque Show New Variety Bill

One of the biggest burlesque shows ever brought to Pittsburgh, according to Manager George Jaffe, will open a week's engagement in the Variety with a special midnight show Sunday night. It is "Holiday Frolicks," in two acts and 44 scenes, with a cast of 22 principals and a chorus of 30 girls. For the holidays Mr. Jaffe has increased his orchestra to 15 pieces, making it the largest orchestra ever to play a burlesque theater in this city. Included in the cast are Ford, Jordon and Regan, dance and comedy team; Eddie Lloyd, comedian; Dot Blue, acrobatic dancer; Syd Burke Esther Burt, Ada Lenard and Ruby Shipman, all oriental dancers and four other comedians headed by Eddie Kaplin. As a special feature Charles Keating will be supported by his sister Grace Keating, in his act portraying the character of "Huckleberry Finn," as he did it in motion pictures.

All in a Day

By Mark Hellinger

The Last Hope

FOR THIRTY-FIVE years, Rudolph Fairweather had trod the boards. He had never been a very good actor. But he was happier by far being a failure in his chosen profession than he would have been as a success in any other.

During the early years of his so-called career, Rudolph was kept fairly busy. There was always some fourth-string company departing for the hinterlands, or a third-rate stock company in need of his alleged talents. He was never rich and he was never successful, but he always managed to keep from actually starving.

As the years passed, however, it grew more and more difficult for Rudolph to secure an engagement. His periods of "resting became more frequent. There were long spaces of time when he had nothing to do except parade up and down Broadway in the early afternoon.

At fifty, Rudolph had nothing except a phony English accent, a shabby overcoat with a moth-eaten fur collar, and a patient and long-suffering wife.

There was only one other person in the world who believed that Rudolph was God's gift to the American stage, and that person was Mattie Fairweather. They had been married a sufficient number of years, so many in fact that she should have been disillusioned long ago, but she still clung to the belief that her husband would some day be a great star.

"All you need," she often told him, "is one good part. And it will come, too. I feel certain of that."

Rudolph was not quite as certain as he had been some 30 years ago. There were plenty of far more competent actors than he to fill any role that happened along. And there was real cause for worry. They had practically no money, and it was growing tougher all the time to borrow a few dollars to pull them through the weeks when he was at liberty.

They were in New York when Mattie fell ill. She had gone to bed with what she believed was merely a heavy cold, but in a day or two she was an extremely sick woman.

Rudolph, who was genuinely fond of his wife, hastened for the doctor. He wrung his hands and stalked about in true Shakespearian fashion while the physician examined Mattie.

The doctor called him in presently.

"It isn't serious," he declared, "but I assume you realize that your wife has a very weak constitution. Too weak, in fact, for this climate. I'd suggest that she be sent out to the Coast. To tell you the truth, it's absolutely necessary."

Rudolph waved his arms in a hopeless gesture.

"I don't see how it can be arranged," he confessed. "I'd gladly do it if I could afford to."

Mattie spoke up weakly:

"There's my sister's family in California,'" she reminded him. "If only I could get there everything would be all right. I could stay with them. Oh, Rudolph, if only something would turn up! If only you could get a part and earn enough for the fare out there!"

Rudolph bent over and patted her on the arm.

"There," he soothed, "now don't you worry. I will find something. I promise you, Mattie, I'll get something very soon."

The man was obviously in earnest. He spent the greater part of the next two weeks hanging around the offices of agents and producers. But it was the same old story. There was nothing for Rudolph.

He knew that he must get something. Mattie's health was more important than anything else in the world. Then, when things looked almost hopeless, he learned that a certain producer was putting on a play.

It was a friend who told him about it, a man who said, "I heard there's a good part in it and one that would suit you right down to the ground. Why don't you go around and see?"

But Rudolph couldn't do that. He had been walking around all morning, and he was dustier and shabbier than usual. He needed a shave and his hair was badly in need of cutting.

He rushed back to his rooming house and told Mattie about his prospects. He had a hunch, he said, that this was the part he had been waiting for all these many years. He waited impatiently while she brushed his hat carefully and mended the frayed buttonholes on his coat. He polished his shoes until they were as bright as mirrors. And the last bit of their remaining money went to pay for a haircut and shave for Rudolph.

He was gone several hours. Mattie could hardly curb her impatience. While she waited she prayed. Rudolph must get this part. He must. So much depended on it.

When the door opened and Rudolph came in slowly, Mattie needed but one glance at his face to know that the had failed. He slumped down on the edge of the bed and buried his face in his hands.

The woman went over and pressed her thin while fingers over his.

"You didn't get it?" she asked.

Rudolph shook his head.

"No, the same old story. 'Not the type!' How many times have I heard that in the last 30 years?"

"I'm sorry," Mattie spoke gently. "What sort of a part was it? Did you find out?"

"I found out all right," Rudolph said bitterly. "They wanted someone to fill the role of a down-and-out actor." . . .

'Wonderland' In Davis

By WILLIAM J. LEWIS

"Alice in Wonderland," film in the Davis, has a real Christmas flavor. The atmosphere and as much of the charm of the Lewis Carroll classic of childhood as it is possible to recreate through pictures alone have been recreated. Of course, there is the dialogue, too, but it is in the pictures that the illusion is built up to such a degree that Alice finds herself in a veritable wonderland, talking to frogs that seem real, to the Cheshire cat that seems real, to a Tweedledum and a Tweedledee who ARE real—or almost—to the Duchess and the Queens and the King, and the White Knight, and all of the other enchanted people who have been known and loved by youngsters of all ages for many years.

Like the stage version of "Alice" recently seen here, the film begins with the opening of "Through the Looking Glass," with Alice talking to her kitten. She also plays with the chessmen and the first thing you know they are weaving about and talking to her—and the spell is on. Through the looking glass she goes, and there she takes up the trail of the rabbit that is to lead her into many strange adventures and to meet the grotesque creatures of the whimsical mind of Carroll.

The illusion of reality is an impressive quality of the photoplay—Alice growing large and small before your very eyes, shedding tears that become a river in which she swims, then becoming dry as you watch by the process of such dry things as history and arithmetic. And so on.

And what a cast it takes to play all of those parts. Besides Charlotte Henry, who plays Alice, there is a list of stars as long as your Christmas gift list. Richard Arlen, Roscoe Ates, Gary Cooper, Jack Oakie, Louise Fazenda, May Robson, Baby Leroy and Edna May Oliver are just a few of them!

Exotic From Illinois New in Studio

Rosemary Ames, who will be seen in a film now called "Disillusion," is a tall, slender girl, with carrot-colored hair. She looks like no typical movie actress. From Chicago, she spent several years on the stage in England, and went to Hollywood with a Fox contract.

She will probably be compared to Dietrich, to Hepburn, to Garbo. She may even be called an "exotic."

That suggestion causes her to smile. "An exotic—from Illinois?"

But she is hopeful, she says, that she can avoid being compared to anybody, play good roles well, and keep on getting good roles.

Her stage experience in England did not send her home with what is commonly called the "English accent."

Montefiore Group To Elect Trustees

WILL ROGERS SAYS

BEVERLY HILLS, Cal., December 23.

To the Editor, Sun-Telegraph:

There is really not much new under the sun. Thirty-seven years ago a long-haired young man come riding a day coach out of the West, and said something about:

Will Rogers

"You can't crucify us on a cross of gold, we want the wreath on our brow to be studded with about 16 silver ducats to one gold doubloon."

In the meantime silver was used as the sole medium of exchange by over three-quarters of the earth's population. With us it was a money but never official, it just had a slot machine value.

So lying under Arlington's hallowed soil today there must be a satisfied smile. For it's something to be 37 years ahead of your government.

Yours, WILL.

Teddy Joyce Welcomed In Pitt

By ZORA D. UNKOVICH

That smiling master of ceremonies, Teddy Joyce, returned as an entertainer yesterday, after an absence of two years, to receive a veritable welcome home. With him in the Pitt was his orchestra and a New Brighton lad, Jerry Goff, who sang in a way that the theatergoers liked.

Teddy's soft-shoe dancing proved as popular and as different as of yore. For old time's sake he played on his violin a softly, sweet "When Day Is Done," his first violin solo when he came to Pittsburgh four years ago. His orchestra's musical Christmas gift was a well-played interpretation of a "Fantasy in Blue."

With Christmas week a gala week on the Pitt stage, musical comedy also was on the bill in the form of "Bottoms Up," an amusing pot pourri with no discoverable co-ordination between its scenes. In it appeared the pleasing Chester Hale Girls with their dancing numbers for the chorus bits.

Excelling in the acts was slightly lisping Helen Honan, whose imitations of a number of movie actors, Lupe Velez, Zazu Pitts, Schnozzle Durante, Ruby Keeler, Mae West and a you'd-think-it-was-he-in-person Charlie Chaplin, done with singing and dancing, were really convincing. Beth Miller, another one-woman presentation, favored blues songs when she appeared, making good use of both voice and eyes.

The Four Camerons supplied the gags, some badly worn. Father Cameron was more or less the master of ceremonies. David, the dancing nitwit, surprised the audience by jumping rope while lying flat on his back. Daughter Cameron was blonde and acrobatic. Sonny, the baby of the family, said his say with dancing, gliding feet.

The Lee Gails bit and kicked and pulled hair in the course of a particularly wild Apache dance.

Even the NRA entered into the show with "Senator" Lewis, a Pittsburgh boy, who was at times funny, then again got no further than trying.

"Fury of the Jungle," on the screen, lived up to its tempestuous name, with Donald Cook, Peggy Shannon, Allan Dinehart and Dudley Digges the chief objects of an unkind fate.

No-Kiss Pact Enforced

Evelyn Venable's "no kiss" contract with Paramount which provides that she will not be required to participate in any form of osculation before the cameras, asserted itself during the making of "Death Takes A Holiday."

Fredric March had to content himself with a brotherly kiss on the shoulder during the making of a scene. He frowned.

"But what would my father say?" protested Evelyn. "He had the clause written into the contract."

"What will my father say!" returned March sadly, "when he sees this scene on the screen?"

Kay Francis Is Star In Stanley

By MARGARET RUSSELL

"The House on 56th Street," in the Stanley this week, is a story with a nice geometrical pattern of circumstances revolving in cycles about a central point, i. e., the house mentioned in the title. It is a story with manifold appeals.

For the moralist, there is the moral that the light-hearted sinner will pay and pay. For the realist there is plenty of hard, grim realism. For the sentimentalist, there is a deal of romance and frustration and enduring motherlove. For the fatalist, there is that quality of the inevitable, that sense of fate at work in its favorite pastime of twisting the threads of life into a tragic pattern.

Kay Francis does some of the best acting of her career in "The House on 56th Street." She shows such a variety of moods and coiffures and costumes as to make the head whirl. She is ideally suited to her role as Peggy Martin, "Follies" girl of 1905, who gets broken on the wheel of life.

Exchanging her sophisticated "protector," John Halliday, for an ardent and wealthy young husband, Gene Raymond, she tastes gloriously of happiness for a little while until loose ends of her past catch up with her and trip her into a 20-year prison term. When she is free, the war has claimed her husband and her daughter is lost to her. Subdued and aged, she faces a changed world.

Her life-long passion for, and agility with, cards, throws her in with an extraordinarily kindly professional gambler, Ricardo Cortez, with whom she begins the last cycle of life which sweeps her eventually back to "The House on Fifty-sixth Street," there to be tortured with the cruel contrasts of past and present.

She lives to see her daughter in the identical predicament which had wrecked her own life. Motherlike, she protects her child from the consequences of her paralleled tragedy and ironically goes on living in the "house" whose very walls hold precious memories of an earlier and infinitely happier cycle in her life.

The program includes a musical short, "The Preferred List," passable entertainment, and "Popeye, the Sailor," very good entertainment. Pathe News completes the program.

STOCK MARKET PLODS ALONG QUIETLY

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—Stocks plodded along quietly in the early part of today's short trading session. Metals met light profit taking, while weakness in tobaccos carried over from yesterday. Utilities and a number of industrials ruled steady.

United States Steel preferred rose 4 points, but the common only got up fractionally. American Telephone, a recent weak spot, more than canceled an initial point loss and Consolidated Gas, United States Industrial Alcohol, New York Central, Standard Oil of New Jersey and Public Service of New Jersey were about even. Recessions of 1 to around 2 points were suffered by United States Smelting, Liggett & Myers B, Allied Chemical, Reynolds Tobacco B and Cerro de Pasco.

Owing to the fact that the Treasury was closed for the Christmas holidays, no gold price was announced and the previous rate of $34.06 an ounce continued in force. Most foreign exchanges opened quietly, the British pound sterling being quoted at $5.10¾, up ½ cent, while French francs were unchanged at 6.11½ cents.

Aside from the silver influence, various political and trade factors were being studied by market analysts. There were many conjectures as to just how Congress would perform. Brokerage circles were also wondering whether legislation pertaining to the regulation of speculation would be enacted. The opinion was general that there would be no great demand for new inflationary measures, although it was expected that many of these would be introduced.

Wall Street noted reported remarks of the President that he hoped a world-wide silver agreement could be extended to other monetary bases. In some quarters this was interpreted as meaning a desire for currency stabilization, although it was pointed out that the Chief Executive did not use the word gold.

Most banking quarters hold the belief that, while the administration might like to get back on the gold standard at a lower dollar ratio, an international monetary agreement probably would be difficult at the moment because of economic and political situations in some of the European countries.

NEW ISSUES UP IN NOVEMBER

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—(AP.)—Security issues registered under the new securities act and permitted to become effective were reported by the Federal Trade Commission to have shown a substantial increase in November over October.

Fifty-one registration statements became effective in November, the commission said in its first official summary of registration under the new legislation. These represented gross proceeds of $76,129,977 as compared to 44 effective issues in October with gross proceeds of $39,154,601.

The bulk of the increase was in the volume of common stocks, the dollar volume showing an increase of more than 40 million. Practically all this increase occured in the flotations of financial and investment companies, the total gross proceeds of this group having been estimated at $56,766,547 for November as compared to $12,940,261 for October.

Richards to Head Local Board Again

R. S. Richards has been nominated for the presidency of the Pittsburgh Stock Exchange at a meeting of the members. His reelection is assured, since there is no opposition.

Other nominations follow:

Fir vice president, Samuel Carothers; treasurer, William J. Bauer; directors (three to be elected for three years), F. C. Masten, C. E. Dinkey, Jr., Thomas Lynch, Lew Smith and Claude F. Pugh.

The election will be held January 2.

Internal Revenue Tops November 1932

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—An increase of more than 50 million dollars in internal revenue collections for November, as compared with November a year ago, is shown in figures made public by the Treasury Department. Compared with October, 1933, however, a drop of more than 28 million dollar is shown. Total collections during November, 1933, amounted to $135,706,922, against $164,148,137 for October and $85,484,476 for November, 1932.

Ford Production Schedule Expands

DETROIT, Dec. 23.—Production of Ford cars and trucks scheduled for January will be the largest for January since 1930 and will exceed the totals in every month this year, with the exception of June, July and August, peak production months in 1933, the Ford Motor Company announced.

TREASURY AIDE TARGET OF COUZENS

By MERRYLE RUKEYSER
Universal Service.

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—Senator Couzens has started a campaign against Earle Baillie, one of the chief aides of Acting Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau.

Mr. Rukeyser

The criticism, it is understood, centers around the record of the banking house with which Baillie had been associated.

Perhaps it is equally pertinent to determine whether Baillie is qualified for his job. His particular assignment is to advise the acting secretary on practical questions of governmental financing.

MEETS FIRST TEST

The first test came recently with the successful offering of bonds on a one-year basis at 2¼ per cent. Evidently Baillie knew how to whet the appetite of personal and institutional investors, for the billion dollar offering was three times oversubscribed.

The new deal requires practical men, as well as theorists.

Morgenthau himself, though not a financial expert, is a qualified administrative officer.

Under his direction, the Treasury is in step with the President's program, and this should contribute to the quality of government credit.

Before Morgenthau took hold, there were instances of lack of co-ordination. Early in the spring, after specie payment had ceased, the Treasury put out a new issue, which promised payment in gold. In a month this promise was repudiated.

URGES U. S. PROSPECTUS

Likewise, later, when the Treasury offered a conversion plan, the atmosphere of stability required to induce such long-term commitments was upset by the new gold policy.

In light of the existing monetary policy, short term financing is more in order.

On account of inconsistencies under the former management of the Treasury, carping critics have suggested that the government would have been a technical violator of the new Securities Act, if its offerings had not been exempt.

David Lawrence, taking a cue from the critics, seriously proposes that the government further its own credit by issuing prospectuses, setting forth the balance sheet position of the United States and emphasizing the resources of the country.

A sensible approach to the concept of a balanced budget is on the basis of a whole business cycle, rather than a single year.

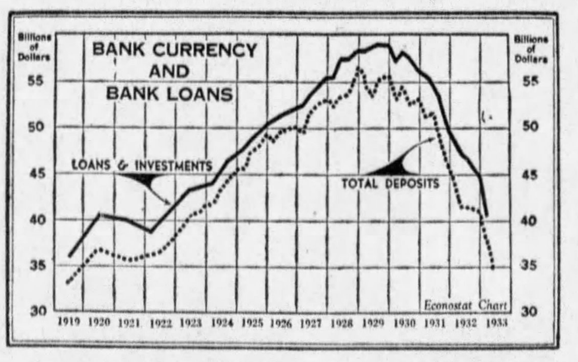
Decline in Deposits Follows Loan Trend



By JOSEPH STAGG LAWRENCE
Editor, The Economist

Yesterday's chart dealing with the total amount of money in use showed a preponderant portion of the total consisted of bank deposits. By extending credit to clients and permtting them to draw on that credit with checks the banks have been able to displace to a very substantial degree the currency issued by the government itself.

The procedure is somewhat as follows: Mr. Smith, either on the strength of his character, his prospects of making a profit or through the deposit of adequate security, is able to get a loan of, let us say, $5,000. The bank, as is well known, does not give Mr. Smith $5,000 in currency. Instead, the account of this borrower is credited with the proceeds of the loan.

Against these proceeds Mr. Smith then draws his checks and makes payment. As the checks are paid out they are received by other people and in turn deposited in their own banks. Thus the $5,000 loan, even if does not long remain in the account of Mr. Smith, nevertheless has increased the total deposits in the banks of the country by $5,000.

When the banks restrict their credit and demand payment from their borrowers this process is reversed. Mr. Smith must wait until he has accumulated in his own account credit sufficient to pay the loan. This credit has been acquired by checks received from individuals to whom he has made sales and constitute deductions from their accounts. As Mr. Smith pays off his loan his account is charged with $5,000.

Hence, the net effect of a contraction of loans is an equal contraction of deposits. In other words, it is directly deflationary.

Bearing this discussion in mind, it is well to look at the accompanying chart. One line represents loans and investments and the other total deposits of all the banks in the country. The fidelity with which the two lines move together indicates the essential relation between them. The decline in total deposits has been matched by an equal decline in loans and investments.

Any disparity between the two may be the result of hoarding of currency on the one hand or the return of gold to the banks on the other.

Weekly Bank Clearings

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—(AP.)—Bank clearings are somewhat mixed, New York City showing a loss while an increase appears at outside centers. The total for the week at all leading cities in the United States, as reported to Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., was $4,631,400,000, a decrease of 1.2 per cent compared with the record for the same week of last year. New York City clearings were $3,185,297,000, a reduction of 2.6 per cent from a year ago, while the total for all centers outside of New York of $1,446,103,000 was 2.1 per cent higher.

The increase at outside cities was at Pittsburgh, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Omaha, Buffalo, Atlanta, Louisville, Dallas, San Francisco, Portland and Seattle. Corporation taxes payable at this time raised bank clearings somewhat. The total this week was in excess of that for the preceding week by $543,249,000; a year ago the increase was $853,856,000.

Figures for leading centers, showing increases and decreases as compared with those of last year are printed herewith; also daily bank clearings for the year to date:

SILVER BUYING MOVE SEEN AS 'GESTURE'

By LEWIS HANEY
Professor of Economics, New York University.

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—The President has ordered the purchase by the government of over 24 million ounces of silver at the price of 64½ cents an ounce. This he does by decreeing our mints shall receive American-produced silver and issue half of it in "standard silver dollars."

The standard silver dollar contains 385.8 grains nine-tenths five, and the old statutory "price" of silver was $1.29 an ounce. But under the new decree, our miners are to get back only half the silver they turn in for coinage. Thus they receive half of $1.29, or 64½ cents per ounce.

The world price of silver at the time of the decree was 43 cents an ounce. So the President's action amounts to saying to American silver producers:

"I will give you 21½ cents per ounce more than you can sell your silver for."

The ratio of silver dollars to the old gold dollars by weight in grams remains 16 to 1, and the ratio of the government's "pegged" prices is over 50 to 1. But the ratio of the market value of silver to the market value of gold is about 79 to 1.

MIGHT REPLACE GOLD

It follows, therefore, that if the government's price were to be really effective and if silver dollars were to be issued in large amounts, silver would replace gold as our standard money. Overvalued ("cheaper") money always drives out other money.

But actually the President's move is a mere gesture. Like the gold-buying policy, it is so limited it can have little direct effect except on "psychology."

If it is accepted as an entering wedge, it may have great effect in stimulating speculation and in causing a flight from the dollar.

On the other hand, if it comes to be regarded as a mere sop to the silver mine interests and to the inflationists, given with the idea of staving off their more extreme demands, it may eventually have the opposite effects.

'DROP IN BUCKET'

As the thing now stands, it means buying only 15 million dollars worth of silver. It applies only to American silver produced in the future. It is limited to four years. This is only a drop in the bucket. If it is accepted as the final step, it will have little lasting effect.

It will distribute a bonus of about five million dollars to the silver-producing interests. It will add about 15 million dollars in big silver dollars to our "circulation." This is about all.

But what about the future? Men will wonder if this is letting down the bars. If it is a good thing to buy any silver at all at higher prices, why not buy more?

If the price of silver needs artificial raising, why not buy enough to be really effective? If the injection of silver dollars into our currency is desirable, why not coin enough to amount to something?

The danger is that the silver-buying policy will merely increase our monetary uncertainty and stimulate speculation.

And I think it more likely to keep alive the demand for "real" inflation than to check it. For example, if the government can legislate a "price" of 64½ cents for silver, why can it not raise the price to the "statutory" $1.29?

Junior Patrol

We have been getting a lot of Christmas cards, fellows!

All of them are very pretty. Some of them are decorated with silver and gold. Others have beautiful pictures. One cute one we got the other day has three little Scottie dogs playing with a big red ribbon! And lots of others show old-fashioned people having lots of fun playing in the snow or riding in sleighs, or eating a big Christmas dinner.

Every time we open an envelope, we get a surprise. Seems like every card is prettier than the others! It's mighty nice to have your friends remember you on Christmas Day, and we hope that every Junior Patrol member is getting some Christmas cards, too.

Some of the verses on the cards are fun to read. Have you ever tried to write poetry, fellows? Don't laugh, now. Some of the greatest men who ever lived wrote poetry. And almost anyone can do it, too. Try it, why don't you? Always write just what you feel—never write what you think you OUGHT to write, or copy the poetry written by somebody else.

You know, fellows, that the Santa Claus we have now is a spirit—a wonderful spirit of kindness and generosity that sweeps over the world every Christmas. But do you know who was the first Santa Claus?

Well, they say that he was a rich and lonely old man who lived in a town in Holland. He saw that other people around him were not so well off, and he determined to help them. So he took many bars of his gold and went at night and dropped it down their chimneys, so that they saw the gold gleaming in their fireplaces the next morning! Other countries have different Christmas customs than we do here in America. We all know that in Holland, for instance, and sometimes in France, they set their wooden shoes on the fireplace instead of hanging their stockings the way we do.

Today we received five pledges from fellows who live in Alicia, Pa. Among them are John Weman and Steve Beatty. Why not start a patrol, fellows? Get 10 members to elect a captain.

And now here's a letter from Ralph Shoup, of R. D. 1, Brownsville, Pa., who writes:

"I read your Junior Patrol news every night and it is very interesting. I am going to the hospital for an operation in a few days and whenever I return home I am going to start a Junior Patrol."

Fine and dandy, Ralph, and we hope that everything goes along fine. They treat you swell in a hospital, usually, and we will be looking for your Junior Patrol pledges when you get home again.

ALUMINUM CO. VICTORIOUS IN BAUSH SUIT

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Dec. 23.—(AP.)—The Baush Machine Tool Company, of Springfield and Chicopee, Mass., has lost its nine million dollar suit against the Aluminum Company of America after the longest trial in the history of the United States Court for this district.

Trial of the suit, instituted July 24, 1931, required 48 court days. In contrast, the jury returned its verdict yesterday after only four and a half hours deliberation.

Damages of three million dollars and a punitive judgment of six millions were asked by the Baush company. It charged the Aluminum Company caused it a loss of three million dollars through control of prices, monopoly of raw materials and suppression of independent producers.

PLAN FOR APPEAL SEEN

Immediately after the verdict, counsel for the Baush company asked a continuance of the district court term, which action lawyers viewed as a probable preliminary to an appeal.

The record of the case covered 5,800 pages, totaling some 1,150-000 words.

Nearly two score witnesses testified. The judge's charge to the jury required two and a half days. Six and a half weeks were used by the Baush company to present its case.

The Aluminum Company's defense, based on a general denial that the company was a monopoly, required three weeks.

The plaintiff is one of a group of three aluminum companies outside of the 16 companies forming the Association of Manufacturers in the aluminum industry.

This group of three manufacturers was referred to recently by Gen. Hugh S. Johnson as a minority, forming only 2 per cent of the industry, whose insistence on certain code provisions was holding up the NRA code for that industry.

OUTLINE FIRM HISTORY

In the course of the trial evidence was presented that the Aluminum Company of America had been organized as the Pittsburgh Reduction Company in 1888 to promote the commercial production of aluminum, and had pioneered in the development of the aluminum industry in the United States.

The Baush company sued the Aluminum Company, alleging that the Baush company had been engaged in the production of aluminum alloys and in the fabrication of such alloys.

The plaintiff further alleged that the Aluminum Company was a monopoly maintained by the suppression of independent attempts to enter the aluminum business, that it owned the bulk of the commercially available bauxite (the ore from which aluminum is made) in the world, that the Aluminum Company's relations with the foreign producers were not competitive and that the Aluminum Company had fixed an artificial price level for aluminum in this country.

Added Cost Cited At Light Hearing

Peter A. Loftus, an engineer, a witness before the Public Service Commission at which arguments opposing a municipal electric plant in Coraopolis were heard, testified that the borough would spent $14,148.50 more for its present street lighting system in the next 10 years than it would under its present contract with the Duquesne Light Company.

The hearing was held before Commissioner Samuel Walker. Attorney John M. Walker, representing the Citizens' Committee, favors the municipal plant for which a $75,000 bond issue already has been voted.

BYRD IN PLANE RECONNOITERS

ABOARD BYRD FLAGSHIP, Antarctica, Dec. 23.—(AP.)—(By Mackay Radio)—A flight over the uncharted vastness of the Ross Sea has convinced Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd that he will be able to push his ship much farther toward Little America than he first expected.

When his flagship, plowing along the 150th meridian, encountered what seemed to be an impenetrable ice pack, Admiral Byrd ordered the ship back to open water, lowered his huge seaplane over the side and took off yesterday in a surprise flight over the unknown spaces lying ahead.

He returned four hours later with the report that there was no heavy ice pack ahead, contrary to the usual belief. There was supposed to be an impenetrable pack extending far across the Ross Sea, backed by a mass of land, somewhat of an archipelago. After what he observed on his flight, however, Admiral Byrd was not sure of this.

As a result of yesterday's flight, Byrd will be able to push on by ship, although eventually he will be stopped by the ice now forming. Then he plans to go on to his base at Little America by plane, from where he will make further explorations.

J. Swift Miller, Ice Official, Dies

He also was secretary of the Diamond Ice Company, of Braddock; a member of First Presbyterian Church and of the Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Miller leaves his wife, Ella; one brother and four sisters.

1 Dies, 4 Hurt in Gale RazingTurkey Homes

ISTANBUL, Turkey, Dec. 23.—(AP.)—A Turkish mosque, a divinity school and several old houses collapsed here during a severe blizzard today. One person was killed and four injured.

Black Sea shipping was paralyzed by the storm, which raged across a wide area.

Manager Robbed Of Store Receipts

Theft of $2,100 receipts of a Clover Farms store, in Park avenue, Clairton, was discovered early today by S. Barello, manager, according to a Clairton police report.

The money had been placed in a dresser drawer in Barello's apartment over the store, he said.

WATER BOOST WAR IMPENDS IN COUNCIL

A storm of protest over the proposal of the McNair administration to boost water rates in the South Hills wards of the city by more than 50 per cent is likely to break in City Council soon.

Mrs. R. Templeton Smith, financial representative of the Mayor-elect, has told Council it should cancel the contract with the South Pittsburgh Water Company and let the people of the South Hills buy their own water at company rates.

The water company charges 33 cents per thousand gallons in its first step and 40 cents per thousand in its second, which compares with the city's 20 cents per thousand in the first and 18 cents per thousand in the second.

HINTS AT SURCHARGE

Mrs. Smith declares the legality of the contract by which the city buys water from the company at company rates and sells it to consumers at city rates should be determined, and hints that if it proves illegal, officials who authorized payments to the company should be surcharged.

The Pittsburgh Real Estate Board has for several years urged that the contract be abrogated. This can be done legally on 90 days notice at the end of any calendar quarter.

However, boards of trade all over the South Hills are expected to appear before Council next week to protest. The South Hills residents declare that city water rates were held out to them as an inducement when many of the South Hills boroughs were annexed, and that they are helping to pay for bond issues which finance the other parts of the pittsburgh municipal water system.

SUGGESTS BOARD CUT

Other reductions suggested by Mrs. Smith involve the elimination of two of the Board of Water Assessors, one of them Republican Ward Chairman Lon Mackintosh.

Total economies suggest thus far by Mrs. Smith in addition to the water company contract total $333,111.

Council has passed finally by a vote of 6 to 3 the repeal of the six million dollar subway bond issue of 1919. The action was taken to increase the people's borrowing power.

COUNTY SAVES $117,786

The County Commissioners have made reductions of $449,579 in the 1934 budget, which now stands at $20,228,902.

Miscellaneous accounts were lopped $117,786 yesterday. The largest cut was $64,000 from a requested $75,000 for interest on loans. By early payment from a bond issue of a million-dollar debt, this saving could be effected by preventing accumulation of interest through the term of the loan.

Aldermen's fees and costs were slashed from $100,000 to $75,000.

With an explanation from Commissioner C. M. Barr that the Commissioners did not object to the county pension fund but to its setup, a requested $120,000 was held up on that fund. A suit is pending to compel the Commissioners to pay $75,000 due the fund in 1933.

No appropriation was made for expenses of the Board of Visitation because of "shortage of funds."

DOUG, JR., TAKES NEW 'TITLE'

International News Service.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Dec. 23.—Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., has taken on a title. It wasn't acquired in England, but is of his own making.

He has become an "international commuter."

Living up to it, Doug is rushing through a Hollywood picture, so he can take an airplane to New York and sail for Great Britain January 21 on the Europa. Partying questions today, he said:

"I like more to do things in a hurry. That's why I rushed over here to make one picture, and that's why I'm rushing back to England.

"Of course, there might be other reasons for rushing back."

Railroad's Holiday Traffic Hits Peak

In Memoriam 1-B

Mary Jane Sigmund, departed this life December 23, 1932.
What would I give to clasp her hand,
Her saintly face to see,
To hear her voice, to see her smile,
As in the days that used to be.
Some sweet day we will meet again,
Beyond the toil and strife,
And clasp each other's hand once more
In Heaven, that happy life.

By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS

(Republished from Cosmopolitan Magazine and soon to appear on the screen as a Cosmopolitan production made for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and starring Marion Davies.)

By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS

Richmond was a brave city of gallant folk who resolutely tried to ignore the gathering gloom and journey forth to foregather with their friends. For to brood at home was unendurable.

It was known immediately that another beautiful woman was in that town of beautiful women—a Miss Cleburne. The Cleburne name, and the first glimpse of her in church, that Sunday, set the aristocracy a-twitter.

It did not take long. Mrs. Preston spoke to her; she visited Mrs. Webb's hospital in the afternoon and met there Preston Hampton, Mrs. Lee, Mrs. Breckinridge and Constance Cary, Mrs. Howell and Burton Harrison came in. Then Mrs. Semmes and the Misses Preston. It was very easy, now.

At evening service there were, in church, generals enough to officer an army corps, and many youngsters and their families, wives and sweethearts.

Major Venable and a lovely Preston girl they called "Buck," and a lame general—golden hair and beard and viking eyes in his long, sad young face—these took charge of her. And she drove home in Mrs. Davis' carriage with the lame general, whom they all called Sam, and who turned out to be the simple-minded headlong John Hood.

Then a lovely Miss Haxan, a Mrs. Stanard and a Colonel and Mrs. Ives took her to Mrs. Webb's, where was supper of oysters, partridges and champagne; and where every gown except her own had been turned though many a necklace of pearls and diamonds glimmered in the gas light.

Quick Contest

Veiled slyly by the golden lashes, the dark eyes and golden hair had done their devastating work among the youth of the feverish Southern city. To all charities, all hospitals, nursing circles, sewing circles Operator 13 was bidden. Everywhere the sister of young Cleburne was welcomed. And always, everywhere around her young men in gray and gold—many of them lame or bandaged—gay, handsome, jesting lads who made the most of the arrowy hours and a world aflame hurtling toward destruction.

Courtships were swift with Death sitting in the prompter's box and the vast curtain trembling toward descent.

Mrs. Ould and the colonel, commissary of prisoners, gave a tea for the beautiful Miss Cleburne.

The Webbs gave a ball. There was a proposal in the flirtation room from a big blond boy on crutches. Another on the stairs—middle-aged major this time, and very fiery. They were all quite mad about her, the Kentucky contigent, Tennessee, and Carolinas, Georgia, Virginia.

At the Ives' theatricals, where Mrs. Clay played Mrs. Malaprop and Constance Cary made a lovely Lydia Languish, the sad-faced, obvious Hood whispered his discovery in her ear: "I believe that fellow Acres is a coward!" And Breckinridge nearly died of suppressed mirth.

Interrupted Gayety

In the farce which followed Operator 13 was cast for the lead and her professional dancing and singing astounded everybody. Amid a tempest of cheers and clapping she responded to the curtain call, but they wanted her to sing or do something; and a colonel of cavalry passed a banjo to her across the footlights, not knowing whether she could play it.

So, adjusting the ribbon sling across her shoulders, the girl song the Negro "Christmas Day" spiritual for them:

"Big star shinin' in the sky,
Chris'mus Day!
Chris'mus Day!
Mary, she come runnin' by.
'Whar de manger?' Mary say.
'Laws-a-mercy, los' mah way!'
Mary wuz in pain.
Baby born on Chris'mus Day.
Angels sing an' angels pray
In de manger Chris'mus Day!
A-a-ll day
Chris'mus Day."

They didn't want to let her go; but Hood's body servant, Cy, came to whisper to the lame general, who got up immediately; and in the sudden silence, the sound of cannonading shook the chandeliers till the prisms tinkled.

* * *

Operator 13's reports to Col. Sharpe were clear, unhurried, concise, all written in No. 7 cipher. Sometimes Scobell took them into Glendale for Jack Babcock; sometimes Billy Dix, in dusted boots and ragged dress of a farmer boy, peddling vegetables and eggs, drove his bony mule and cart across from Drewry's Bluff and always sold Scobell something at the kitchen door, and took the dispatches back to the blood-drenched territory near Cold Harbor.

One day she saw a huge wounded officer in St. Paul's Church, Maj. von Borcke, and experienced a tiny pang of fright. But the big cavalryman could have no recollection of the little mulatto laundress at Jeb Stuart's quarters.

Constant Anxiety

The only real anxiety that the girl had was dread of the real Miss Cleburne's sudden return when some blockade runner slipped into Wilmington. With this ever-threatening death warrant in mind, she went about her pleasures and her duties in a role so perfectly befitting her that insensibly the tragedy of it invaded her; that she—whose business was their betrayal—should be so welcomed, trusted and beloved by these gentle folk.

But Gen. Grant, hammering at Lee, smashing his gory way toward Petersburg, wanted information.

Bragg, with his tactless temper, had gone. Wily Joe Johnson had gone also, replaced by a Texan, sad-faced Hood, ordered to find and fall upon Sherman.

"We want to know," wrote Col. Sharpe, "whether Lee means to throw any troops into Petersburg."

John Scobell took the answer of Operator 13 to the Glendale tavern, whence Jack Babcock and his wiry horse, Gimlet, flew northward with it.

On June 18 the 1st Maine Heavy Artillery lost 70 per cent of its men in seven minutes. In a week the Vermonters lost 1,600 out of 2,000. In the 5th Georgia 54 per cent fell in one fight; 68 per cent were lost to the 8th Tennessee. And now to the beautiful Capitol on the hill the end of all things was approaching—invisible as yet—moving just beyond the smoke fringe across the river, and the concussion of its awful tread shook all the world.

Beautiful Sight

On that beautiful June morning the beautiful Miss Cleburne chose to ride her beautiful horse, wearing her beautiful English riding habit which, molded to her as elastically as her own delicately beautiful skin, displayed beautiful horsemanship and her utterly beautiful proportions for the benefit of heaven and earth alike. John Scobell, immaculate in his groom's brass-buttoned skirted coat, breeches and boots, ambled along behind her.

Cherokee rose hedges were in snowy glory; mocking birds sang in China trees; orioles in elms, and the James rushed dashing between its tumbled rocks. She proceeded slowly along the river because so many demoiselles and gallants hailed her with gossip gay or grave that she was some little distance from the city before the road became clear and solitary.

She was thinking of nothing in particular. Letters and notes and messages required by social usage had been answered and dispatched, marketing checked up; bankbook balanced; Confederate money in strong box counted; servants paid; flowers, wine, fruit, books, papers sent to hospitals . . . Not so bad!

That sunny tranquility, resultant, possessed the girl with the superior feeling that she was prepared for anything the day might offer her.

Sudden Terror

There came into view, lounging in their saddles, the handsome Mrs. Penn; Maria Lewis, who was Maria Freeland; Betty Miles, who was Betty Bierne; Dr. Le Conte, of the powder factory; Capt. Ashmore, Maj. von Borcke and a younger officer whose careless saddle-suppleness galvanized the girl's brain cells of recognition and touched with exquisite fright the sensitive nerve of fear.

At a distance, even, she knew him for a certainty, though he wore the Confederate gray and scarlet of the artillery.

She drew bridle and said to John Scobell, without turning her head: "The artillery officer is John Gailliard;" and a moment later they confronted her with uplifted riding whips and widespread hats and caps.

"Where do you ride, my pretty maid?" called out Betty Miles. "Come back with us to juleps, pompano and iced Chablis!"

"Seasoned with Dr. Le Conte's best powder," added Mrs. Penn, making her horse do some impromtu dance steps.

Mrs. Lewis presented Capt. Gailliard. When the boy recovered from his profound bow he still carried his gold-laced forage cap in his gloved hand.

Operator 13 looked him straight in the eyes.

That he had not the slightest suspicion concerning her was certain; that he had been hard hit at first sight by flower-dark eyes with golden lashes gave her a strange little pang. And in that balanced moment, weighed so delicately with life and death, the girl felt her cheeks flushing with growing wrath.

There was a moment's gathering on restive horses for a hasty dish of gossip, a clatter of parting hoofs, gay voices calling back reminders of promises and rendezvous; and Operator 13 galloped on, with Scobell at groom-distance behind.

Where oaks thickened and the road twisted through the sunny green duck of foliage, the girl signaled slightly and the Negro galloped within earshot behind her.

"Yaas'm. Cap'm Gailliard ain't never knowed yuh."

"No: he didn't. I'm not afraid of him. But I hope Chancellor is not here."

"I gwine find out, ma'am; ax Mars Gaston's man, Dick."

"Yes, find out . . . There's something about Chancellor—I don't mean he frightens me; but I don't like him. He brings bad luck, somehow."

"Mighty smart spy, dis hyar Chance'ler, ma'am."

"He's a dangerous man," said the girl. "Once I could have killed him, or had him killed. Sometimes I wish I had."

PICTORIAL EDUCATION

CLASSICAL ARCHITECTURE AND SCULPTURE—GREATEST ART OF THE ANCIENT GREEKS

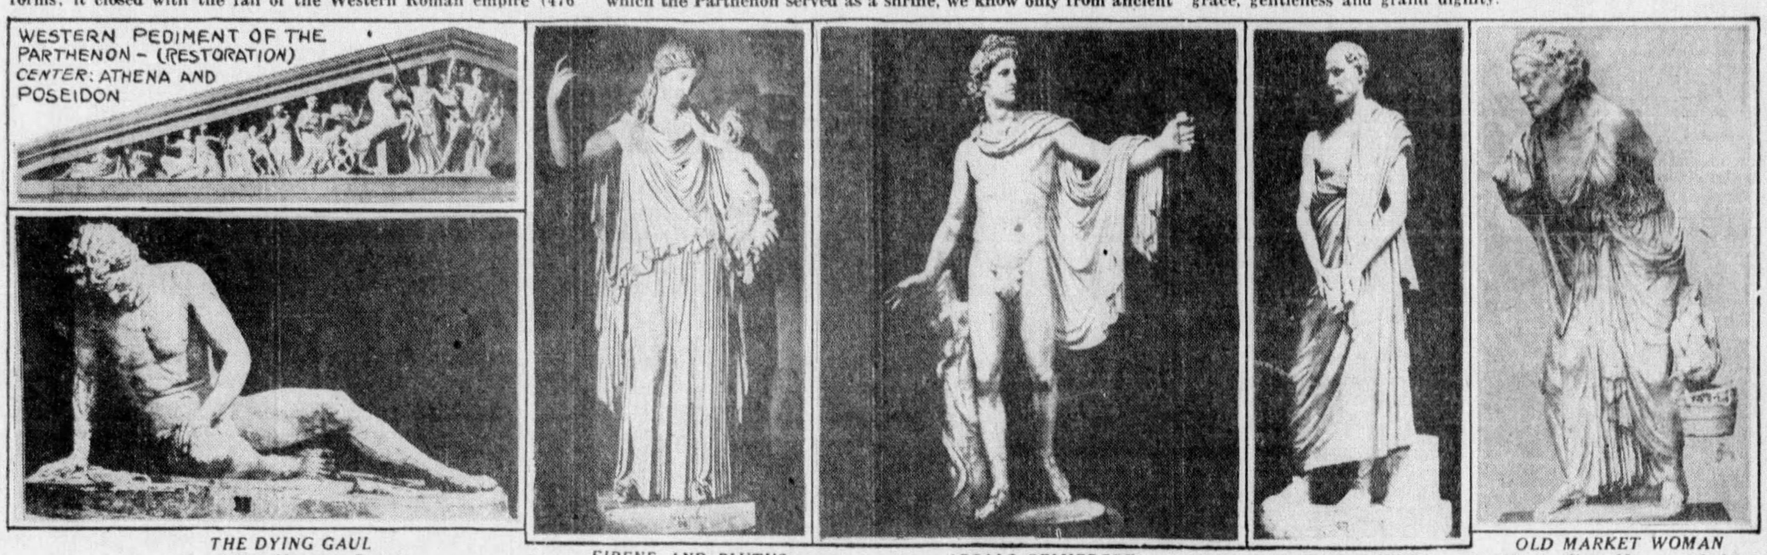
The Classical period of Art comprises that of the Greeks, Etruscans and the Romans.

Having gathered rich inheritance of the Oriental Arts, Greek Art had first its Archaic period extending from the dawn of civilization to the expulsion of the Persians (479 B. C.). The period of Perfection followed, a phase of greatest splendor, ending with the death of Alexander the Great (323 B. C.). In the third or Hellenistic period Greek Art attained sublime beauty in harmony and plastic forms; it closed with the fall of the Western Roman empire (476 A. D.), coinciding with the end of the historical Ancient World.

Greek architecture was designed along three orders, the robust Doric, the graceful Ionic and the rich Corinthian.

The monuments of the Acropolis at Athens, conceived by the greatest Greek sculptor Phidias (500?-430? B. C.) embracing both Doric and Ionic orders, are the highest expression of classic architecture. The crowning piece is the Parthenon in Doric order. Athena Parthenos, the great gold and ivory statue by Phidias, to which the Parthenon served as a shrine, we know only from ancient replicas and descriptions like his other great works.

Some of the celebrated creations of the classical masters: The Laocoon Group in the Vatican by Agesander, Athenodorus and Polydorus (School of Rhodes, Second Cent. B. C.). With perfect anatomical knowledge and highest skill is expressed the physical agony and mental anguish of the father struggling against death, a powerless witness to the killings of his sons. Aphrodite of Melos, (Second Cent.) is the sublime expression in marble of womanly grace, gentleness and grand dignity.



THE DYING GAUL (Capitoline Museum, Rome)

The Dying Gaul by Epigonos (Third Cent. B. C.) shows the dramatic style of the school of Pergamon, marking the culminating point of Hellenistic Art. Excitement and agitation of movement of this school is in contrast with the calm austerity, repose and moderation of that of Phidias. Eirene, Goddess of Peace, bears on her left arm infant Plutus, symbol of wealth in an admirable group of Cephisodotus (Fourth Cent. B. C.). Apollo Belvedere, marble copy of bronze original, possible by Leochares (Fourth Cent. B. C.) is imbued with supreme grace, elegance and agility. Statue of Demosthenes by Polyeuctos (Third Cent. B. C.) is a realistic and dignified portrait. The Old Market Woman (Second Cent. B. C.) presents real life, which, though lacking charm and monumentality, is gripping in its truthfulness.

DURING CHRISTMAS VACATION THE SUBJECT OF PICTORIAL EDUCATION IS ART PICTURES.

Uncle Sam Pays Top Prices

Notice that hogs dropped in price right after the government bought a couple million?

Only thing new about the wavering transaction is that the government never bought hogs before.

The Middle Western boys explain the drop by saying there was a big movement of cattle toward the market. Right after the government bought a lot. Hi, ho, everybody.

It's the old Army game, boys. Five will get you 10 if you're dealing with government dough.

We don't know what there is about a federal contract that makes a man healthy, wealthy and wise. But the man who gets a Washington deal always retires fat and sassy and his mustachios never stop dripping gravy.

People who are honest about all other matters consider it smart to skeenozzle Uncle Sam out of all the blood the turnip can spare.

Farmers will hire veterinarians to save busted-down mules that ain't worth a dried leaf in a high breeze. It ain't sentiment. They want to keep him alive until they can sell him to the Army.

Same with all kinds of goods. How about the war? The survivors of every battle figured one soldier to every two new millionaires. We admit the contractors made some sacrifices. On meatless Mondays they ate caviar, mushrooms and Persian melons.

On coalless Thursdays they went to Florida and California for the day. It won the war.

Did you pipe some of the boats the government bought during the conflict? You could have sold wood-burning locomotives for a line running through the petrified forest.

Soon as they find that Washington wants something the prices double up. But not in pain. It's from joy.

So, me lads, if you want a career, just forget everything you learned in college except the multiplication table. Concentrate on that and set out to grab yourself a tasty federal buying list. It will keep the wolf from the door. And, if he ever does approach the portals, it will only be to admire the gold doorknob.

Take a tip from The Bug who has been through it all. And is now a respected patriarch. Not because he was honest. But because the jury disagreed.

The Beauty Box

By HELEN FOLLETT

Plump ladies, some of them, endure excess fat with patience and resignation, but when a roll of adipose tissue humps up on the back, just below the nape line they see red and get mad about it. Shouldn't. It is easy enough to be rid of that anatomical blemish. Clasp the hands over the hump cushion, turn the head from side to side; with each turn knead the flesh using a circular movement. Three or four minutes of this exercise, then—with the hands still clasped and resting upon the roll—stretch the body tall from the waistline.

Perspiring hands are a bother and a bore. Try the salt rub, it often helps. Moisten salt, grind into the palms, remove with tepid water. Dust the insides of gloves with borated talcum. Don't forget that moist skin indicates nervousness, so get a firm control over emotions, take exercise out of doors every day, drink plenty of water, eat nourishing food, do everything that makes for an existence of vitality and health. The glove overhead will diminish; life will be more zestful.

Have you noticed all the red-headed girls that are flying round? Henna is a madness again. More hair coloring appointments are made than ever before. And don't believe that platinum is out. It isn't. The natural blonde is no longer content with her golden locks, she must have them white gold. She gets herself in for plenty of expense, since the touch up must come along every three or four weeks; darker hair close to the scalp gives the secret away.

Cold, wet weather is what the complexion likes. Be a rainy-daisy, get out when the day is misty-moisty. Walk fast enough to make the flesh warm and the skin glowing. Spirits as well as complexion will liven and freshen.

A Relic of Oxcart Days

Pittsburgh Needs Sewage Disposal Plants—Brief Comment On Local News.

The long campaign to free the rivers from industrial pollution bore fruit this week when the work of sealing abandoned coal mines was started. This is a Civil Works Administration project, designed to protect the streams from the sulphuric acid which drains into them from old coal workings. If it accomplishes all that is hoped, Pittsburgh's water should become softer.

Even with complete elimination of industrial pollution, however, the rivers will not be pure. An enormous amount of untreated sewage is discharged into the streams by Pittsburgh and the communities above us in the Allegheny and Monongahela valleys and below us on the Ohio. To use the rivers as open sewers is a relic of oxcart days, unworthy of twentieth century civilization. Of course, the water is made fit to drink by filtration, but the rivers are unfit for bathing.

It was recognized as long ago as 1905 that to discharge sewage into the waters of the commonwealth is an evil; in that year the Legislature passed a law forbidding it unless a permit was granted by the Sanitary Water Board. Some progress has been made in inducing municipalities to establish sewage disposal plants, but not as much as is desirable. Pittsburgh should give it some thought.

Another relic of oxcart days is our system of local government, with its many political subdivisions, created a hundred years ago. Many are unnecessary now, because modern methods of communication and travel have brought counties, boroughs, townships and school districts into close touch with one another. Consolidations are in order.

F. R. Phillips, president of the Philadelphia Company, said in his address to the Electric League of Pittsburgh on Thursday that taxes today consume 25 per cent of the national income. This staggering burden is the price we pay for oxcart government and the horde of political parasites that it has fastened on us.

One day's earnings out of four of the average American citizen, according to Mr. Phillips, go to the maintenance of the government. We have reached the point, he said, where taxation is draining the purchasing power of the people generally to such an extent as to stifle the distribution of goods and the flow of trade. The situation is aggravated by the fact that the taxes are used in large part to support political loafers.

Frank D. Rohmer, director of the vocational department of the Lincoln High School at Midland, Pa., calls attention in a letter to the Sun-Telegraph to the fact that employes of the state liquor stores are to be paid higher salaries than school teachers. This is a just grievance. But the liquor store employes are not paid excessively; so the remedy lies in paying the teachers more.

If we were to get rid of oxcart government, there would be more money available for the teachers. We could save $150,000 a year in Allegheny County, for example, by eliminating superfluous collectors of school taxes. It costs $37,306 to collect Pittsburgh's school taxes, as against a cost of $186,939 for the collection of a smaller amount of school taxes in the districts outside of Pittsburgh.

The board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce has adopted a report of the committee on highways and bridges, urging the early construction of a super-highway across the continent as a federal project. This is a commendable action. The Hearst newspapers have long advocated the building of a transcontinental highway.

We note with pleasure that District Attorney Andrew T. Park has ordered the prosecution of the election officials of a Homestead district where the ballots found in the ballot box after the election last month are said to have been more numerous than the voters. The prosecution is gratifying as evidence that Park has not forgotten his pledge to fight crookedness at the polls.

District Attorney Park's inactivity in respect to the election frauds of 1932 was disappointing. It was not right that the prosecution of these cases should be left to the United States District Court, which can consider only evidence affecting the validity of the election of federal officials. Park may, if he desires, make use in Quarter Sessions Court of testimony in the Federal Court election fraud trials that relates to the election of state and county officials.

According to the almanac, yesterday was the first day of winter. But much of our autumn weather was about as harsh as we are likely to experience before spring arrives. The outlook for a white Christmas is not encouraging. Let us hope, then, if we are to have no snow, that the holiday will be as bright and sunny a day as yesterday, and not like Tuesday, the smokiest day of the year.

Apropos of smoke, it is gratifying to learn that six of the additional inspectors provided for the municipal Bureau of Smoke Regulation by the Civil Works Administration will advise and assist private home owners in so stoking their furnaces as to prevent the emission of smoke. Factory owners have been pretty well trained by now. It is the home owners who require education.

Tomorrow's issue of the American Weekly, the magazine distributed with the Sunday Sun-Telegraph, contains an interesting article about a new mammoth recently found buried in the frozen earth of Siberia. Although the flesh is so well preserved that it is to be eaten, it is estimated that the creature lived 20,000 years ago, or about 14,000 years before the dawn of history.

Twenty thousand years ago seems very recent to the geologist. A Pittsburgher found some fossil cup corals of the species known as Lophophyllum profundum in the bed of the brook that flows alongside the Scaife road, back of Sewickley, and sent them to the Smithsonian Institution. The institution informed him this week that these corals lived 275 million years ago.

In tomorrow's issue of Puck, the Comic Weekly section of the Sunday Sun Telegraph, you will find pictured some monsters that might very well be akin to the gigantic creatures whose bones are on display in the Hall of Paleontology at the Carnegie Museum. The monsters play a prominent part in the adventures of Boob McNutt, one of 24 first-class comics presented by Puck.

Human Side of the News

The Robinson County Indians of North Carolina Suggest a Romantic Theory

By Edwin C. Hill

NEWS is not a matter of headlines, nor altogether of listed facts. News is like a human being in the sense that it has a soul. And the soul of news is always the story behind it, those oft-hidden comedies and dramas and stark tragedies which lurk behind the headlines and the facts.

The appearance in the news of the name of Pembroke, in Robinson County, N. C., is an instance of what I mean. One would go a long way in this broad country to find a neater town and a sounder county than Pembroke and Robinson, and the probable reason revives one of the most romantic stories and one of the great unsolved mysteries of America.

In Robinson County, N. C., live some 12,000 Indians, known as the Robinson County Indians. They are a fine and handsome people. Some have blue eyes. Some have grey eyes. They speak only the English language. They use phrases of speech that have scarcely been heard since the day of Shakespeare and the Red-Haired Queen.

These people have made Robinson a great county. And, if tradition holds any truth, they are the descendants of the lost colonists of Roanoke. In their veins flows the blood of the courageous men and women who attempted to establish, on Roanoke Island, the first settlement of English folk on the North American continent. Their blood, and the blood of the Red warriors who captured them.

The Birth Of Virginia Dare

A GREAT tale behind it all. A brave young woman was Eleanor Dare, moulded of that stern, adventurous stuff of the England of Sir Francis Drake, Walter Raleigh and Queen Bess. It was her destiny to follow the Union Jack across the turbulent Atlantic to land with her father, Governor John White; her husband, Ananias Dare, and 118 other English colonists on a little patch of sand-rimmed green, 60 miles north of stormy Hatteras. Their little fleet, following the bright but ill-omed star of Raleigh, put into the shelter of Roanoke Island on a June day in 1587.

Less than two months later Eleanor Dare gave birth to a daughter, a blue-eyed, yellow-haired child, they tell us, and she was baptized Virginia, for the Virgin Queen and the land from which she had sprung. For at the time the whole Middle Atlantic region was the Province of Virginia.

Today, when one crosses from the Carolina mainland over the Orville and Wilbur Wright Memorial Bridge, one comes upon a slab of granite which marks the spot where Virginia Dare was born. Tall trees surround it, and climbing vines of grape, while on a knoll close by are the ruins of old Fort Raleigh, much as they were long centuries ago. And when you talk to the people about—fisherfolk, many of them—you are startled to hear in their habitual and customary speech words and phrases that Will Shakespeare was fond of using when he gossiped in the tavern of Avon or the inns of Fleet street in old London Town.

Are they indeed, these people, the children of the lost colony of Roanoke, of the blood of Virginia Dare and that little band of Englishmen and Englishwomen who vanished as utterly as the Tribes of Israel, or the wonder men who raised up the pyramids of Yucatan, or the mighty race who carved beauty into marble in temples strangled now by the jungles of Cambodia?

They vanished, these settlers of Roanoke, leaving behind them nothing but a word, the word Croatan, carved in the bark of a tree. That was all that Gov. White found two years later when finally, after being delayed by such affairs as the Spanish Armada, he returned to Roanoke with new settlers and new supplies.

Of his daughter and her husband, and little Virginia Dare, and the 118 he had left behind, there was not a trace. Gone. Vanished. Swallowed up by the forest. Only the word Croatan, carved in the bark of a tree. It was the name of another Indian tribe and of another island.

* * *

No Trace Found Of Lost Colony

THE Governor searched like a mad man, up and down the coast and deep into the dark forest. He could find nothing, nothing. Disgraced and ruined, Sir Walter Raleigh, gazing westward from the barred windows of his prison in the Tower of London, vowed he would live to see the day when Virginia was an English nation.

And that he saw, before King James' axmen clipped his luckless head from his handsome body. Twenty years after Virginia Dare and the people vanished, Capt. John Smith settled at Jamestown and heard from King Powhatan a tale of how the colonists had been massacred, all but seven who had been taken into the Roanoke tribe. And a century later travelers and explorers reported in the Cape Hattaras region the presence of a rare tribe of Indians—Indians with blue eyes and gray eyes, and the tradition of having white people as their forefathers.

And so Virginia Dare, that first white baby born on American soil, lives in tradition, lives beautifully in the legend that all woodsmen know from Maine to Florida—that a white doe roams the forests, a white doe that only a silver arrow can slay, a white doe that was once a beautiful maid of Virginia.

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

By O. O. McIntyre

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—A leisurely prowl through one of New York's vast department stores is as exciting as any jaunt on the island. Morning organ recitals, afternoon fashion shows, best selling novelists autographing books, expert bridge games, aquariums, zoos and screen and stage stars.

Here are vanities and follies not surpassed by Ziegfeld and Carroll. The penny-pinchers and splurgers mass together for bargain hunting swoops. I commend to singlers out of rare beauty the array at any glove counter.

Frequently I submit to the impish impulse of fingering some counter article, looking about furtively and watching the jumping-jack appearance from behind a reredos of derbied fellows, known as store dicks. They never miss a bet. From then on you are trailed.

Much comedy has been evolved, too, from those exquisites in gardeniaed cutaways and pearly striped trousers—the patrollers of aisles. Yet no class of workers expresses greater courtesy. Tap them and you find potential doctors and lawyers via a night school route. Two ex-floor walkers are movie stars.

* * *

Every department store is electric with astonishing inside telegraphy. When Marie Dressler, bless her, is spun inward through a revolving door, the top floors knows it as quick as that. Without telephoning or lip-to-lip tom-tomming, it has the mystery of a psychic phenomenon. Spooky!

* * *

Mammoth stores are unreckonable outlets for domestic drudgery and suburban servitude. As much as the theater, they are escapes from life's monotonies. At no cost, the housewives are pitchforked to scenes of splendor. Nowhere may the ordinary soul come within touching distance of such brilliant overplus.

* * *

Notables wander—even as you and I—through the glittering promenades. One may see hard-boiled Bill Halligan with unconscious gravity idling before those pyramids of perfume in Euclidean dazzle. Or Sinclair Lewis trying to decide between green and purple blazers. The green winning in the usual manner of redheads.

* * *

I've seen Hoover loiter before treasures in Gumps, San Francisco. W. H. Taft often sauntered through Pogue's in Cincinnati. And I once beheld Marlene, in white-trousered publicity seeking, stroll through Bullock's in Los Angeles. In New York—Mrs. Fiske, Grace George, Alice Longworth, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and one you'd never suspect as a department store prowler, Eugene O'Neill.

* * *

The charm is in a store's superb democracy. The shawled Mrs. Gilhooley of four flights up on Avenue A is to outward flummery as welcome as the furred snipping known as Park avenue's biggest charge account. Weary shop girls are legendary spouters of acerbities. They are reputed to punctuate: "Thirty-six out of a dollah!" with such asides as "Pipe this tomato I'm waiting on. Mrs. Noah right off the ark!" But the shoe is usually on the other foot. The customer's. They are the stinging back talkers.

* * *

Spindrifts of drama blow constantly through broad department store aisles. There is the sabled wife of the millionaire, a victim of kleptomania, whose furs conceal many purloined articles after she strides majestically through the store. But it doesn't matter. The bills are merely sent to her husband. There is the sound-proof hospital room where outbursts of customer hysterias are calmed. Fitting rooms incubate most of these pyrotechnics.

* * *

I have seen saleswomen go suddenly white in the midst of some sale as a messenger delivered that thunderclap of horror: "The manager wants to see you!" Usually that is the down dip of life's saddest nuance—dismissal. I'm familiar with the seen-better-days ladies of the rest rooms, writing letters, reading magazines and remembering the other half of changed lives.

* * *

I cannot exude the thinnest lather over a sob sister's tears for the department store workers. They are cliffed in daily among the most stimulating dazzle: vis-a-vis with personalities the average worker sees only in news reels. There is no chance for minds to run slack as in the doldrums of other jobs. Daily the department store is an emotional six reeler unspinning pride, avarice, intrigue, pomp, poverty and humility. Each counter hides a romance. Every aisle flaunts pomp of a noble ambition!

LISTEN, WORLD!

By Elsie Robinson

When the Christ Was Born

Midnight—and stars.
Bare, wind-swept hills and huddling flocks of sheep.
A straw-heaped manger, in a peasant's hut.
And loneliness, more dark than any night,
And poverty, more cruel than any wind—
THE NIGHT THE CHRIST WAS BORN.

Born to a gentle, dreaming Hebrew girl;
An aging, weary village carpenter;
Poor shepherds, without riches, rank or right;
Wise men, who spent their lives in search of truth—
TO THESE THE CHRIST WAS BORN.

Born for the poor, the lonely and the meek;
For gentle dreamers, and those worn by toil;
For watchers, who serve, hopeless, through the night,
And searchers, who give all to gain the truth—
FOR THESE THE CHRIST WAS BORN.

These only, in a world grown fat with ease;
These only, in a world grown cruel with power,
Had eyes to see the glory of that star;
Had ears to hear the wonder of that song—
THE NIGHT THAT CHRIST WAS BORN.

Two thousand years ago He came, they say,
Yet daily, in our midst, the Hope is born;
Always Truth lights the desert like a star;
Always Love breaks the darkness like a song—
FOR THOSE WHOSE CHRIST IS BORN.

But only those who serve throughout the night,
And bed their dream on life's bare rock and straw,
Can glimpse that splendor, hear that mighty chant.
Or, in the valley, find the healing peace
THAT COMES WHEN CHRIST IS BORN.

Once Overs

By J. J. Mundy

You have a certain way of doing things that is easiest for yourself.

You might adopt the methods of others, but you prefer your own.

You have reached a certain degree of skill but still you seem to be at a standstill in advancement.

Perhaps this is because your method will not allow you to go further.

You are blocking further accomplishment by adhering to your own particular way of doing things.

What's the matter with you—are you too stubborn or too lazy to change?

Are you unwilling to put yourself through a course of necessary practice to get beyond your present skill or speed?

There is only one really right way to do anything.

Any other way than the right way eventually slows or impedes your progress.

It is so in everything.

There are many ways of doing things that seem to bring results, but there is only one fundamental principle involved if you want to be perfect.

Why pursue a course that will never lead to perfection?

Don't you want to feel you are "always on the way?"

Mrs. Roosevelt Speeding Action on Child Labor

By James T. Williams, Jr.

MRS. ROOSEVELT puts the case for the prompt ratification of the Child Labor Amendment to the Federal Constitution so clearly, so concisely and with such sincerity that her argument will carry conviction to the four corners of the country.

"I hope the Child Labor Amendment will be pushed," says the wise and devoted wife and mother of the White House. "I look upon the codes as a method of pointing out possibilities to the people.

"But there is termination to the codes and the things we find working well we want to see perpetuated either through the Child Labor Amendment or through state law."

Bitter experience has proved the utter futility of state laws to eradicate the evils of child labor. In state after state attempts to get uniform legislation to regulate the employment of the population of the country that is of school age had been defeated. The blame for their defeat rests squarely upon the forces of special privilege. In every state capitol in the Union, the lobby against uniform laws governing the labor of persons under 18 years of age has defeated their enactment over a long period of years.

As a result of this experience, Congress in 1924, by the required two-thirds vote of both houses, proposed the Child Labor Amendment to the Federal Constitution to the several states for approval. So powerful were the forces of special privilege in the various state capitols, however, that ratification of the amendment was blocked in state after state.

* * *

Thousands Deprived Of Education

ALL the while thousands upon thousands of young Americans were growing up without the free schooling that is their birthright because they were entering employment of all sorts before they had finished their schooling, and in many cases before they had got their growth and were physically equipped for the employment they accepted.

For the nine years preceding January 1, 1933, the record shows that only six of the 48 states gave their legislative consent to the ratification of the proposed Child Labor Amendment. Since the first of the current year, however, many additional states have been added to the honor roll of ratifiers of this humane proposal.

Unless special privilege recovers from the blows it has received in recent months at the hands of state legislatures, the ratification of the Child Labor Amendment will be the great national achievement of the year 1934. Congress can then enact legislation regulating the employment of all persons under 18 years of age throughout the union.

Federal legislation in this regard will put each state on an equality with every other state and prevent a minority of any industry from compelling the majority of the industry to utilize child labor as a means of competition.

* * *

Permanent Safeguard In Federal Law

THIS is done in part by the codes of fair competition which are now in force in many industries. But, as Mrs. Roosevelt points out, these codes are limited as to time. Nor do they embrace all occupations now employing child labor.

The only permanent safeguard for the young people of the nation of school age against premature employment that will interfere with their education and retard their physical, mental and moral development is a Federal law that is fair and that is everywhere in force.

Twice the United States Supreme Court has declared that under the constitution Congress has not now the power to enact such legislation. For this reason the Child Labor Amendment has been approved by the Congress and is now before the states for ratification.

The swiftness with which this amendment is receiving the legislative consent of the states proves anew the truth of Abraham Lincoln's words:

"Public sentiment is everything; with public sentiment nothing can fail, without it nothing can succeed."

Public sentiment is compelling the legislatures of the several states to ratify the Child Labor Amendment to the Federal Constitution, the forces of special privilege to the contrary notwithstanding.

OUR RHYMING OPTIMIST

By Aline Michaelis

Life Victorious

Life, hear the tumult and toil of it,
Clamor and strife and turmoil of it.
Life with its changes;
Intricate, strange is
Life, and man caught in the coil of it!

Life, see the glamor and gleam of it!
Vision the wonder, the dream of it;
Life, the great spender,
Joy in its splendor,
Seek for a glimpse of the scheme of it!

Life, of all gifts the most glorious,
Even when stern and laborious;
Ah, may you capture
Life's starry rapture,
Making your living victorious!

Isn't It So?

An optimist is a man who is winning.

Contented people are usually found in a cemetery.

Paint makes an old house look new, and a girl seems to have the same idea about it.
